Title:

language causes/ affects Asian International Students self-segregated

Keywords:

Language differences, Asian international student, self-segregation, social life on campus, native language

Abstract:

My research is to show that language differences are a critical factor to self-segregation for international students. Language is the basic tool for people to communicate and to understand each other. International students each has their own native language, although they are able to speak English, but "home sick" made them gather around with those who are able to speak the common native language. They can express themselves better with native language than with English. Therefore, as international students express their personality, the relationship between them gets closer. Non-Asian students find it hard to mix into these international students since they don't understand the language. Thus, they say these international students self-segregating.