The person charging this material is responsible for its return to the library from which it was withdrawn on or before the Latest Date stamped below.

Theft, mutilation, and underlining of books are reasons for disciplinary action and may result in dismissal from the University.

To renew call Telephone Center, 333-8400

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

DEC 17 1986

MAY 27 1989

L161—O-1096
ILLINOIS CLASSICAL STUDIES, VOLUME IV
Preface

Volume IV (1979) of Illinois Classical Studies comprises seven Greek and eight Latin studies. The typescript of No. 7 was found on the desk of the late Professor Mark Naoumides, in a form almost ready to print. Nos. 8, 10, 11, 12, and 15 are expanded versions of papers presented during the 108th Annual Meeting of the American Philological Association (held in New York, December 28–30, 1976), at the session dedicated to Post-Augustan Satire, as organized and chaired by Professor Mark O. Morford, of the Ohio State University.

The publication of this volume was possible thanks to generous grants by Dean Robert W. Rogers, Director Nina Baym, and the Greek Government. My gratitude to them is sincere and immense.

Urbana, 4 July 1978

MIROSLAV MARCOVICH, Editor
Contents

1. Kai ke tis Oa' Epee: An Homeric Device in Greek Literature
   John R. Wilson
   1

2. The Two Worlds of the Antigone
   Vincent J. Rosivach
   16

3. Does Euripides Call the Gods μακάριοι?
   Marianne McDonald
   27

4. The Manuscript Tradition of Aeschines’ Orations
   Aubrey Diller
   34

5. Perfect Friendship in Aristotle’s Nicomachean Ethics
   Theodore Tracy, S.J.
   65

6. Theophilus of Antioch: Fifty-five Emendations
   Miroslav Markovich
   76

7. The v-Recension of St. Cyril’s Lexicon
   Mark Naoumides
   94

8. Method and Structure in the Satires of Persius
   Edwin S. Ramage
   136

   K. R. Bradley
   152

10. Amicitia and the Unity of Juvenal’s First Book
    Richard A. Lafleur
    158

11. Irony of Overstatement in the Satires of Juvenal
    S. C. Fredericks
    178

12. Satira and Satiricus in Late Latin
    Kenneth M. Abbott
    192
13. Disiecta Membra: On the Arrangement of Claudian’s Carmina minora
GEORG LUCK
200

14. Interpreting Second Declension Singular Forms in -u
PAUL A. GAENG
214

15. Aspects of Roman Poetic Technique in a Carolingian Latin Satiric Text
CHARLES WITKE
220
Nothing is more characteristic of the Homeric respect for public opinion than those speeches within speeches that project what people might say after a given turn of events. So Hector in the Iliad addresses his spirit as he awaits the onrush of Achilles. If he retreats now, Poulydamas will be the first to reproach him for not having ordered a withdrawal earlier. But the reproach will also be general (22.105-108):

... αἰδέομαι Τρόιας καὶ Τρεφάδος ἐλκεσιπέπλους, μή ποτὲ τις εἶπησι κακῶτερος ἄλλος ἐμεῖον:
"Εκτωρ ἦψι βηθῆσι πιθήσος ἐὼλεσ ὕλον."
ὅς ἐρέοσιν...

In Homer this procedure of projecting future opinion is a conspicuous part of the hero’s armory, and its formal characteristics are a suitable object of parody. Thus Hegemon, the fifth century epic parodist, vows never again to venture abroad in search of lucre, but will scoop up money at home in Thasos. Never again will anyone be indignant when his wife bakes a holiday loaf of meagre dimensions, καὶ ποτὲ τις εἶπη σμικρὸν τυροῦντ’ ἐσιδοῦσα:

"ἀφίλη, ἀνήρ μὲν παρ’ Ἀθηναίους ἀείσας πεντήκοντ’ ἔλαβε δραχμάς, σὺ δὲ μικρὸν ἐπέψω." (P. Brandt, Corpusculum poesis epicae ludibundae, p. 44, 15-17 = Athenaeus 15.698 f.). The history of a device that is so recognizably Homeric and so linked to the values of a shame culture is of ethical as well as stylistic interest. In each case the approach to an Homeric pattern, or the deviation from it, to some extent defines the moral attitude of the speaker as well as the stylistic affinity of the writer.

Since in Homer these speeches express public opinion, as voiced by an anonymous tis or "someone," they belong to the general category of what Anton Fingerle has called tis-Reden. As potential tis-Reden (expressions of what people might say), they are to be distinguished from actual tis-Reden (expressions of what people actually said). Formally the difference is reflected in introductory and capping formulas. Actual tis-Reden are introduced in the past tense directly from the narrative, by the phrase ὧδε δὲ τις εἰπεσεκε(ν), and are capped by the phrase ὧς ἄρα τις εἰπεσεκε(ν), or the like. Potential tis-Reden, on the other hand, in their capacity as speeches within speeches that refer to the future, have an introductory formula that is either purposive or predictive, and a capping formula that is invariably future. The content of a potential tis-Reden is either shameful or glorious and reflects the psychology of the speaker who projects it. This is in contrast to actual tis-Reden, which are more often than not morally neutral.

In Homer the opinion expressed in a potential tis-Rede is usually negative, and the speaker projecting this negative opinion is often attempting to dissuade himself or others from a certain course of action. Hector's soliloquy before the onrush of Achilles is an example. Similarly, in the funeral games of Patroclus, Menelaus urges impartial adjudication of his dispute with Antilochus so that no Achaeans can accuse him of pressure tactics. The anonymous Achaean's potential accusation is fully quoted, giving Menelaus ample cause to settle his dispute peaceably (Il. 23.575–578). In the Odyssey, Eurymachus fears the consequences to the suitors' reputation if the beggar in the palace is given a chance of joining the contest with the bow. Here, as in Hector's soliloquy, the imagined speaker

---

1 Typik der homerischen Reden, unpublished dissertation, Munich, 1944, 283–294 (I wish to thank the Institut für klassische Philologie of Munich University for supplying me with a copy of these pages). See also C. Hentze, "Die Chorreden in den homerischen Epen," Philologus 64 (1905), 254–268.

3 *Il. 4.85; 17.423; 22.375. Od. 4.772; 13.170; 23.152.

4 *Il. 3.324; 7.181, 206. Od. 17.488; 18.75; 21.404.

7 καὶ ποτὲ τις εἰπήν(η): *Il. 6.459; 7.87. καὶ κέ τις ὧδ' ἔρει: *Il. 4.176. Cf. also the wish καὶ ποτὲ τις εἰπήν in the incomplete tis-Rede at *Il. 6.479.

is baser than they (Od. 21.324). Nausikaa, too, takes seriously the potential reproaches of her inferiors, should she be seen entering the town with a strange man (Od. 6.275–285). She admits that she herself would feel the same way about another girl in the same circumstances. 9 The truth is that in Homer there is no such thing as non-valid public opinion. 10

But tis-Reden are not always negative, and their function can at times be to encourage and to persuade. For example, in the Iliad Sarpedon encourages Glaukos to fight in the front rank (12.317–321):

... ἄφφη τις ἄδι' εἰπη Λυκίων πῦκα θωρηκτάων· ὡς μᾶν ἄκλεες Λυκίων κατὰ κοιρανέουσιν ἃμετρου βασιλῆς, ἔδουα τε πίνα μῆλα οἰνόν τ' ἔξαυτον μεληδέα: ἀλλ' ἄρα καὶ ἰς ἐσθήλη, ἐπεὶ Λυκίωι μέτα πρώτους μάχονται.'

The third function of tis-Reden in Homer is predictive. An anonymous speech can bring fame or shame in the future without demanding an immediate response. So in a mood of fatalism Hector imagines what will be said about his wife Andromache after the fall of Troy (Il. 6.459–462):

καὶ ποτέ τις εἰπησιν ἱδὼν κατὰ δάκρυ χένουν· Ἔκτορος ἦδε γυνή, ὦ ἀριστεύεσκε μάχονται Ἱρών ὑποδάμων, ὦτε Ἡλιον ἀμφιμάχοντο.

ὡς ποτέ τις ἐρέει . . .

But, he continues, may I be dead and buried by then. 11 More optimistic is Hector's idea of an epitaph for one of his own prospective victims (Il. 7.87–91):

καὶ ποτέ τις εἰπησι καὶ ὀφγόνων ἀνθρώπων, νηὺ παλικκήδι πλέων ἐπὶ οἴνοπα πόντων· ἄνδρος μὲν τὸδε σήμα πᾶλαι κατατεθημάτως, ὡς ποτ' ἀριστεύοντα κατέκτανε φαίδημος Ἐκτώρ.

ὡς ποτέ τις ἐρέει τὸ δ' ἐμὸν κλέος οὖ ποτ' ὀλείται. 12

9 Nausikaa's tis-Rede is the longest in Homer and serves to depict her ambiguous attitude to the local suitors. See Norman Austin, Archery at the Dark of the Moon, Berkeley, 1975, 194.

11 Hector's despair about Andromache is matched by Andromache's own despair about Astyanax. At Il. 22.496–498, she imagines what more fortunate boys will say to her orphaned child (the gnomic aorist at 496 is applied in the future to Astyanax, as 499 ff. show).

12 There is perhaps an element of persuasion here, in that Hector's prospective victim will become famous by association. Conversely, there is an element of dissuasion at Il. 4.176–182, where Agamemnon encourages Menelaus not to die.
After Homer this contemplation of posthumous fame is applied by the writer of personal poetry to his own poietic achievement. So Theognis (22 f.), enlarging the Homeric τις to πᾶς τις,\(^\text{13}\) looks forward to his own fame as a poet:

\[
\text{δὲ δὲ πᾶς τις ἔρει: 'Θευνιδὸς ἐστιν ἔπη}
\]

\[
\text{τοῦ Μεγαρέως: πάντας δὲ κατ' ἀνθρώπους ὑμναστός.'}\(^\text{14}\)
\]

In the same tradition is a fragment falsely attributed to Epicharmus.\(^\text{15}\)

But even in Homer not every projection of opinion is a τις-Rede. When, in Iliad 8.145 ff., Diomede considers retreating before the thunderbolt of Zeus, he imagines not what “someone” will say but what Hector in particular will say if he draws back.\(^\text{16}\) One might add that the “someone” of τις-Reden is usually further qualified as an Achaean, a Trojan, a suitor, or the like. So in Semonides (7.29–31 West), who provides the earliest example of projected future opinion after Homer, it is the ignorant visitor, and not just anyone, who praises a woman whom he has only seen on one of her good days:

\[
\text{ἐπαινέσει μν ἕκεινος ἐν δόμωι ἰδών—}
\]

\[
\text{‘οὐκ ἐστιν ἄλλη τῆς ἱσσάων γυνῆ}
\]

\[
\text{ἐν πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποισιν οὔδὲ καλλίων.'}
\]

Closer to the dramatic context of Homer is the use of projected opinion by Solon in his Salamis poem. This work of about 100 lines is conceived as a messenger speech delivered to the Athenians by a herald fresh from Salamis, which the Athenians are in danger of abandoning to the Megarians. According to Diogenes Laertius, the poem reaches a climax of scorn when the herald wishes he were the citizen of the obscurest island rather than of Athens (Solon 2.3 f. West):

\[
\text{αἵσα γὰρ ἄν φάτις ἢδε μετ' ἀνθρώποιι γένοιτο—}
\]

\[
\text{‘Ἀττικὸς οὔτος ἄντρ, τῶν Σαλαμναφετέων.'}
\]

By projecting the scorn that will be heaped upon them, the herald attempts to dissuade the Athenians from letting go of the island.\(^\text{17}\)

\(^\text{13}\) See Rudolf Führer, Formproblem-Untersuchungen zu den Reden in der frühgriechischen Lyrik (Zetemata 44), Munich, 1967, 54.

\(^\text{14}\) For this punctuation see Felix Jacoby, “Theognis,” SBB 1931, 115 f.

\(^\text{15}\) Fr. 86.12 ff. in Colin Austin, Comicorum Graecorum fragmenta in papyris reperta (= CGFPap.).

\(^\text{16}\) At 152 ff. Nestor argues that even if Hector should call him a coward, the Trojan men and women he has widowed would disagree. The authority of their collective judgement would naturally be expressed by a τις-Rede, and this general judgement would outweigh any individual judgement.

\(^\text{17}\) Even more interesting is Solon’s projection of actual public opinion, in fr. 33 West. The vulgar crowd consider him a fool for not having abused his powers as arbitrator to
John R. Wilson

Chronologically, the next example of projected future opinion is an oracle in Herodotus, which is dated by Parke to around 494 B.C.18

\[ \text{omnis potest etiam tradita in eis,} \]
\[ \text{dein adiastatos apaleteous eis eis eis.} \]

(Parke–Wormell 84.4 = Hdt. 6.77). The predictive function of the tis-Rede follows naturally from Homer, though the author of the oracle mistakenly applies an Homeric capping formula to introduce it.

It is, however, the dramatic use of the device in Solon that points the way to Greek tragedy.19 Proportionally, tragedy contains as many instances of projected opinion as Homeric epic itself. This is partly due to the inherently dramatic nature of the device, which is always thought of as a speech within a speech. In drama, though, we must distinguish between non-argumentative projections of opinion developed from Homer, and the argumentative projections of opinion known in rhetoric as prokatalepsis, where an opinion is set up for the purpose of being demolished. Prokatalepsis is the rule in oratory, whereas poetic examples occur for the first time in Euripides.20

In Aeschylus the power of public opinion is typically very different than in Homer. In Homer it has a quasi-objective force because every one subscribes to it. In Aeschylus there is an element of religious compulsion (Agamemnon 456 f.):

\[ \begin{align*}
\text{baredo \delta' \alphaστων \φατις \ςυν \κοτω,} \\
\text{δημοκράτου \δ' \αράς \τινε χρέαι.} \end{align*} \]

become tyrant. But elsewhere (fr. 32 West), in a hitherto unparalleled defiance of public opinion, Solon defends his own position.

20 For Euripidean examples see Christopher Collard’s edition of Euripides’ Suppliants, ad v. 184 (but the pre-Euripidean examples he cites are all tis-Reden and are not procataleptic). The earliest dated example of prokatalepsis in Old Comedy is Ar. Ach. 540 (425 B.C.), but this is itself a parody of Eur. Telephus 708 N. A possibly earlier example is Pherecrates fr. 154 Edmonds = Athen. 3.122 e. For Middle Comedy cf. Philiscus in Austin, CGFPap., fr. 215.f.—Usually there is no danger of confusing the two types of projection, but at Ba. 204 ff., where the opinion to be rejected is a shaming judgement, the first two lines by themselves could pass as an indirect tis-Rede:

\[ \text{erei tis wos to γήρας oik aioschynomai,} \\
\text{mellos korein krafta kiosasas eimai.} \]

The very next line, however, shows that the opinion was presented for instant rebuttal (hence, as in Murray’s text, one should read 204 f. with an interrogative intonation: “will someone say . . .?”).
Whether their rulers listen or not, what the people say can be effective. It is perhaps the fear of a divinely backed curse that helps Pelasgus in the Suppliants to his decision of consulting the people before granting asylum to the Danaids (398–401):

\[
e\iota_{\iota\nu\nu} \delta\varepsilon \ kai \ \pi\eta\nu, \ o\upsilon_{\kappa} \ \alpha\nu\nu_{\kappa} \ \delta\mu\omega_{\nu} \ \tau\acute{a} \delta \\ \pi\acute{r}a\acute{a}x\acute{a}m\acute{i} \ \acute{a}v, \ \upsilon_{\delta\mu\nu} \ \pi\epsilon_{\kappa} \ \kappa\rho\alpha\tau\omicron_{\alpha}, \ \mu\acute{\iota} \ \kai \ \pi\omicron\tau\dot{e} \\
e\iota_{\iota} \ \lambda\acute{e}\omicron\omicron_{\omega}, \ e\iota \ \pi\omicron\upsilon_{\tau} \ \mu\acute{\iota} \ \tau\omicron\alpha_{\iota} \ \tau\upsilon_{\chi}\omicron_{\upsilon}, \\
\'\epsilon\pi\acute{r}l\upsilon\delta\acute{a}m \ \tau\mu\omicron\omega_{\nu} \ \pi\acute{\omega}\lambda\acute{e}\omicron\omicron_{\sigma_{\upsilon}} \ \pi\omicron\lambda\omicron\nu_{\upsilon}\cdot
\]

The projected accusation, epigrammatic in its assonance and its evenly split line, is an enhancement of Homer’s (Il. 22.107)

"Εκτωρ ἢφι βῆθι πιθήσας ὀλεσε λαὸν."

Note, however, that it is the people as a group, and not a generalized “someone” who speaks.

Closer both in form and feeling to an Homeric tis-Rede is Orestes’ tribute to Athena after his acquittal in the Eumenides. In that play honour is a matter for the gods, whether Olympian or chthonic. Orestes, the only human being in the play other than the priestess at the beginning and the silent citizens of Athens, is preoccupied with survival. But now that for him at least the storm has cleared and he can return into society, he expresses his thanks by an imagined tribute to the Olympian triad (Eumenides 756–760):

\[
\kappa\acute{\alpha} \ \tau\omicron \ \dot{E}l\lambda\acute{h}\acute{n}\acute{i}m\acute{n} \ \dot{e}r\acute{e}i \cdot \\
\
\dot{\acute{A}}\rho\acute{\gamma\eta}\acute{e}i_{\dot{o}_{\dot{h}}} \ \dot{\alpha}_{\dot{n}h}r \ \dot{a}\dot{b}h\acute{i}_{\dot{a}} \cdot \ \acute{e}v \ \tau\acute{e} \ \chi\rho\acute{\acute{m}}\acute{a}si_{\dot{e}n} \\
\dot{o}_{\acute{i}_{\dot{k}\acute{e}i}} \ \pi\acute{a}t\acute{r}f\omega\upsilon_{\dot{o}}s, \ \Pi\alpha\lambda\acute{\alpha}d\acute{os} \ \kai \ \Lambda\dot{o}\dot{z}\dot{i}o\upsilon_{\dot{e}} \\
\dot{\acute{e}}k\dot{a}t\dot{i} \ \kappa\acute{a} \ \tau\omicron\upsilon \ \pi\acute{\alpha}nta \ \kappa\rho\acute{a}i\nu\dot{\acute{o}}\nu\dot{t}os \ \tau\acute{r}\dot{t}o\upsilon_{\dot{t}} \\
\dot{\Sigma}w\dot{t}\acute{r}\acute{h}r\dot{os}\.\]

Equally Homeric and specifically Odyssean is the passage in the Libation Bearers where Orestes seeks to manipulate public opinion in order to assure his admittance to the palace (567–570):

\[
\mu\acute{e}n\upsilon\delta\upsilon_{\dot{m}} \ \dot{o}_{\acute{i}\dot{u}tis} \ \dot{w}os \ \dot{w}os' \ \dot{e}p\acute{e}i\upsilon\acute{k\acute{a}l}\dot{e}\dot{z}e\upsilon \ \tau\acute{i}n\cdot \\
\dot{d}\acute{o}m\upsilon_{\dot{o}}s \ \pi\dot{a}r\acute{a}\pi\acute{e}\acute{t}\acute{o}u\upsilon_{\dot{a}} \ \kappa\acute{a} \ \tau\dot{a}_{\dot{d}} \ \dot{e}n\acute{n}e\acute{p}\dot{e}\dot{e}n\cdot \\
\acute{t}i \ \dot{d}\upsilon \ \pi\upsilon\upsilon\dot{h}\dot{a}_{\dot{s}} \ \tau\dot{o}_{\dot{u}} \ \dot{i}_{\dot{k}\acute{e}t}h\upsilon_{\dot{a}} \ \dot{a}_{\acute{p}e\acute{r}e}\dot{r}e\upsilon_{\dot{a}} \\
\dot{A}\acute{g}\upsilon\dot{\acute{a}}\dot{h}\dot{a}_{\dot{o}}s, \ \dot{e}\dot{i}_{\dot{e}r}_{\dot{e}} \ \dot{o}_{\dot{i}\dot{d}e}n \ \dot{e}n\dot{d}h\dot{e}m\dot{a}_{\dot{os}} \ \pi\acute{a}r\dot{a}_{\dot{w}}\cdot_{\dot{r}}^{21}
\]

In fact, Orestes gains admission with ease and is at once faced with his mother—a moral, not a technical problem. In the Odyssey, Odysseus also thinks of manipulating public opinion to achieve his ends. After the killing of the suitors he orders the household to engage in song and dance (23.135 f.):

21 Alexander Sideras, Aeschylus Homericus (Hypomnemata 31), Göttingen, 1972, 228, notes that the nemesis that would be aroused in such a situation is actually felt by Telemachus at Od. 1.119f.

\[ \ldots \dot{\alpha} \dot{\sigma} \ \kappa \varepsilon \ \tau i s \ \phi a \iota \eta \ \gamma \acute{a} \iota \mu o n \ \epsilon \mu \mu e n a i \ \epsilon k t o s \ \acute{a} k o u \iota w, \ \\
\eta \ \acute{a} \iota \ \dot{\alpha} \dot{d} \delta \eta \ \sigma t e \iota \chi o n \ \eta \ \acute{a} \ \pi e r n u e t a t o u s. \]

But Odysseus' potential tis-Rede (given in reported speech) is soon converted into an actual tis-Rede (Od. 23.148–151), thus confirming the hero’s mastery of the plot.22

In a frankly imitative context, Sophocles provides an even more direct reflection of an Homeric tis-Rede. Just as, in Book Six of the Iliad, in the final scene between Hector and Andromache, Hector imagines the words that will be spoken about Andromache after her captivity, so in Ajax, in the final scene between the hero and Tecmessa, Tecmessa imagines what her husband’s enemies will say about her to his own discredit (505) once she gets into their power (500–504):23

\[ \kappa \acute{i} \ \tau i s \ \pi i k r o \dot{\eta} \ \pi r \acute{o} \acute{s} \phi \theta e g i m a \ \delta e s p o t o \acute{\tau} \acute{o} n \ \acute{\epsilon} \acute{r} \acute{e} i \ \\
\lambda \acute{\omicron} o i s \ \iota \acute{a} \pi t o \acute{\iota} \acute{n} \ \\
A \acute{i} \acute{a} \acute{n} t o \acute{s}, \ \dot{\acute{\omega}} \ \mu e \acute{g} i o s t o \acute{n} \ \dot{\acute{u}} \dot{\acute{x}} \acute{h} \acute{u} o e \ \sigma \dot{t} r a t o \acute{\omicron} \acute{\iota} \ \\ oi a s \ \lambda a t r e \acute{\epsilon} \acute{i} a s \ \acute{a} n \acute{\omicron} \ \acute{\omicron} \ \dot{\acute{a}} \acute{s} o u \ \zeta \acute{\beta} \acute{l} \acute{o} u \ \tau r \acute{\acute{e}} \acute{f} e i. \ \\
to i a \acute{\alpha} \acute{\alpha} \acute{\iota} \acute{\iota} \ \dot{\epsilon} \acute{r} \acute{e} i \ t i s \ \ldots \ \\
\]

Sophocles even imitates the ring form of the Homeric framing formulas, by repeating the verb of speaking. But the difference in speaker and intention is also important. In Sophocles the tis-Rede is spoken by the woman as an instrument of persuasion, while in Homer it is spoken by the man in a vision of despair.24

Characteristically, Ajax rejects Tecmessa’s premiss out of hand (560 ff.). The situation she envisages simply will not arise. As for his own future, any further humiliating possibilities will be forestalled by suicide. One of the rejected possibilities is a reunion with his father Telamon. It is this same possibility that his half-brother, Teukros, envisages in detail, as he laments

22 Among Aeschylean examples we should also note Ag. 575 ff. However we interpret 575 f., 577–579 project a boast that is recapitulated in Homeric style by toia\'\delta\alpha, at 580.
24 For the exaggerated masculinity of Ajax compared to Hector see Michael Shaw, “The female intruder,” CPh 70 (1975), 257 f.
over the hero’s corpse. If Teukros returns home without Ajax he will get a grim reception indeed (1012–1018):

οὔτος τί κρύψει; τοῖον οὐκ ἐρεῖ κακῶν, tόν ἐκ δορὸς γεγώτα πολεμίου25 νόθον, tόν δυσλία προδότα καὶ κακανδρία σέ, φιλτατ’ Αἴας, ἦ δόλοισιν, ὡς τὰ σὰ κράτη βανόντος καὶ δόμους νέομυμ σοῦς.
τουαῦτ’ ἀνήρ δύσοργος, ἐν γήρα βαρύς, ἐρεῖ . . .

As with Tecmessa’s tis-Rede, this indirect projection of Telamon’s opinion is capped by a return to the verb of speaking. The formality of the frame contrasts with the supple modulation into a direct address of Ajax (1015), who thus remains the centre of attention.26

It is not accidental that there are two projected speeches in Ajax, since the whole plot revolves around reputation, and in this respect is the most Homeric of Sophocles’ plays. The only other speech of projected opinion in Sophocles is in the much later Electra. There the heroine evokes the glory that she and her sister will gain if (now that their brother is dead) they take it on themselves to avenge their father (975–985):

But this heady vision does not sway Chrysothemis. What good is reputation if one has to face an infamous and protracted death (1005 ff.)?

Interestingly enough, the praise that Electra imagines is actually given to Antigone (though she never knows it). At Antigone 692 ff., Haemon, in the hope of swaying his father, tells Creon what the city is surreptitiously saying in praise of Antigone. But Creon is unmoved, and this report of 25 To stress the alienation of Teukros, I interpret πολέμιος as hostilis (its normal sense) rather than as bellicus.

26 Note at 1015 f. the expressively repeated pronominal forms σὲ . . . τὰ σὰ . . . σοῦς.
27 The polar expression here is equivalent in its inclusiveness to Theognis’ πᾶς τις, which duly appears in the capping line (984).
actual public opinion has no effect. We may note that in Sophocles projections of future opinion are equally ineffective. 28

In Euripides there are twelve examples of projected future opinion, 29 proportionately more than the number in Aeschylus or Sophocles. Half of these are \textit{tis}-Reden of the Homeric type, except that in Euripides the hypothetical speaker is usually a completely generalized \textit{tis} or “someone,” and is not even a member of such a broad group as “the Greeks.” The imitation of Homer produces an archaizing effect, but at the same time the extreme anonymity of the speaker gives the broadest possible currency to what he says. The remaining half dozen projections of opinion are not \textit{tis}-Reden and show little or no Homeric influence.

The most simplistic examples of \textit{tis}-Reden in Euripides are to be found in the two patriotic plays, the \textit{Heracleidae} and the \textit{Supplicants}. In the prologue to the \textit{Heracleidae} Iolaos, the nephew of Herakles, gives his reasons for sharing in the misery and exile of the children of Herakles as follows (28–30):

\[ \ldots \deltaκνών προδοούναι, \ μή \ τις \ δώθ \ εἰπη \ βροτῶν:\
\textit{ίδεσθ}', \ επειδή παισίν οὐκ ἔστιν πατήρ, \textit{Ἰόλαος οὐκ ἣμως συγγενῆς γεγόσ.}' \]

The ostentatious rectitude of his position, somewhat old-fashioned in its Homeric dress, contrasts with the confident modernism of the Argive herald, whose system of morality is quite different.

Later in the same play, one of the children, Makaria, argues for sacrificing herself to save Athens. Part of her argument consists in envisaging what would happen should she survive the fall of the city that had offered her protection (516–519):

\[ \text{κωδικ \ αἰσχυνοῦμαι δὴ,} \ \text{ἔαν δὴ τις λέγῃ:} \
\textit{τί δὲυρ} \ \textit{ἀφίκεσθ}' \ \text{iκαιοισι σὺν κλάδοις}
\textit{αὐτοί φιλοψυχοῦντες;} \ \text{ἔστω} \ \text{χθωνῶς;} \
\text{κακοὺς γὰρ ήμεῖς οὐ προσωφελήσομεν.}' \]

The feeling anticipated is of shame, yet the thought behind it is practical and quite in accordance with the overall rationality of her speech. If she fails to assist her benefactor now, she can expect no help in the future.

In the \textit{Supplicants} Theseus is shamed by his mother Aethra into helping the Argives gain permission from the Thebans to bury their dead. If he \footnote{28 To the Sophoclean examples we might add \textit{O.R.} 1496–1500, where a catalogue of family woes is transformed into a speech of projected opinion by the capping \textit{τοιαῦτ} ὁνειδίεσθε (1500, cf. 1494).}

\footnote{29 The \textit{tis}-Reden are \textit{Heracl.} 28–30; 516–519; \textit{Supp.} 314–319; \textit{Ph.} 580–582; \textit{Alc.} 954–
960; 1000–1005. Formally distinct are \textit{HF} 1289 f.; 1378–1381; \textit{Tr.} 1188–1191; \textit{IA} 462– 466; 790–800; 1177–1179.}
does help, he will be supporting a principle of international law, while if he doesn’t (314–319):

\[
\text{ἐρεὶ δὲ δὴ τις ὡς ἀνανδρίας χερῶν, πόλει παρόν σοι στέφανον εὐκλείας λαβεῖν, δείας ἀπέστης, καὶ σὺς μὲν ἀγρίου ἄγιον ἢπιώ φαῦλον ἀθλήσας πόνον, οὗ δὲ ἐς κράνος βλέψαντα καὶ λάγχης ἀκμῇ χρήν ἐκπονήσαι, δειλὸς ὁν ἐφηνρέθης.}
\]

Theseus only needs a mild prod to agree. He is, after all, the representative of Athens and as such he is, in all extant Greek tragedy, beyond reproach and sure to succeed.

In these morality plays Honour is unproblematic. This is very different from the tragic world of Hippolytus, where the two major characters, Phaedra and Hippolytus, both passionately espouse honour and the renown it brings, but are victims of their internal enemies or of circumstance. It is very different, too, from those plays, particularly in the later period, where the claims of honour, if they are made at all, are not heeded. So in the Phoenissae Jocasta suggests to her son Polynices that he is in a moral dilemma. If he succeeds in capturing his native city, how will he inscribe the dedicatory shields (575 f.)?

\[
\text{᾽Θῆβας πυρῶσος τάσδε Πολυνείκης θεοῖς ἀσπὶδας ἔθηκε.}
\]

If, on the other hand, he fails and returns to Argos (580–582):

\[
\text{ἐρεὶ δὲ δὴ τις ἃς κακὰ μνηστεύματα Ἀδραστεῖ προσθεῖς, διὰ μιᾶς νύμφῃς γάμον ἀπωλόμεσθα.}
\]

But her plea is not even considered, for Eteocles cuts short the debate by threatening to withdraw Polynices’ safe conduct (for he is only in Thebes on sufferance). In the discussion between the brothers, as in the more desperate parts of Thucydides, Fear and Ambition are the motivations, and Honour is expendable.

Alcestis provides a more sophisticated use of projected opinion. In that play there is a conspiracy of silence between Admetus, Alcestis and the chorus about the seamy side of Admetus’ transaction with his wife, in which he had allowed her to give him a new lease on life by dying for him. After her death, this silence is broken by Pheres, the father of Admetus, who under provocation goes so far as to call Admetus his wife’s murderer. The chorus remains unaffected by this outburst, and does not really comment on it. After the funeral, though, Admetus does change his attitude, but this is only because he realizes that the bargain he had made with death was not such a good one after all, and that Alcestis in death is actually better off than he is in life. For Alcestis had a noble death and is now free of pain, while life without her, as he has just discovered, is no pleasure, and on top of that his reputation has suffered. What Pheres has already said to Admetus reappears as the projection of what his enemies will soon be saying (954–960):

\[ \text{ερε} \ ι \ υ \ μ' \ δ' ι\text{τ}ις \ ε\chi\theta\rho\circs \ \omega\nu \ \kappa\text{υρε} \ \tau\acute{\alpha} \deltaε. \]
\[ \text{\\''ιδ'οι ς τον \ α}'ι\acute{\alpha}χρως \ ζ\omega\nu\theta', \ δ' \ ουκ \ \varepsilon\tau\eta \ \theta\acute{\alpha}ne\iota, \ \acute{\alpha}λλ' \ \eta\nu \ \varepsilon\gamma\mu\epsilon\nu \ \acute{\alpha}ντι\delta\acute{\alpha}υς \ \acute{\alpha}μυ\chi\ia. \]
\[ \pi\acute{\epsilon}\varepsilon\nu\gamma\nu\varepsilon ΐ\iota\iota\nu' \ \varepsilon\iota\eta' \ \acute{\alpha}ν\eta\rho \ \epsilon\nu\iota\alpha \ \deltaοκει; \]
\[ \text{στο}γει \ δ' η\nuς \ \tau\acute{\epsilon}κ\acute{\alpha}ντας, \ \acute{\alpha}υ\acute{\omicron}τος \ ου \ \theta'\chi\ellων \ \theta\acute{\alpha}ne\iota. \ ' \ \tau\iota\acute{\alpha}νδε \ \pi\acute{\omicron}ς \ \kappa\kappa\iota\omega\iota\iota \ \kappa\lambda\iota\delta\o\nu\iota \ \varepsilon\zeta\circ. \]

But in imagining what people will say, Admetus by no means subscribes to their views. The key difference from the Homeric model is that it is not just any one who will speak out against him, but rather his enemies, his echthroi, whose opinion can be at least partially discounted. His public image may be damaged (a regrettable occurrence), but his self image is relatively unscathed.30

In the chorus that follows this episode, the bad reputation of Admetus is implicitly contrasted with the good reputation of Alcestis. Impromptu tributes at the tomb are already familiar from Homer, and just as in the Iliad Hector imagines what will be said at the tomb of one of his prospective victims, so the chorus imagine a visit to the tomb of Alcestis (1000–1005):

\[ \kappa\acute{\alpha} \ τις \ \delta\omicron\chi\mu\iota\iotaς \ \kappa\ell\epsilon\nu\theta\nu\iotaν \]
\[ \varepsilon\kappa\beta\ai\nu\nu\nu \ \tau\o\dot{\theta}' \ \varepsilon\rhoει; \]
\[ \acute{\alpha}υτ\acute{\alpha} το\nu \varepsilon\rho\omicron\theta\iota\nu\nu \ \acute{\alphaνθρως,} \]
\[ \nu\nu \ δ' \ \varepsilon\τι \ \mu\acute{\alpha}κ\acute{\alpha}ρα \ \delta\acute{\alpha}ιμων; \]
\[ \chi\aiρ', \ \acute{\omicron} \ \pi\omicron\tau\omicron, \ \epsilon\nu \ \delta' \ \deltaο\iota\iota\s. \ ' \ \tau\iota\iota\iota \ \nu\nu \ \pi\rho\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron\omicron \ \phi\bar{\eta}μai. \]

As in Sophocles, the tribute to Alcestis follows the Homeric pattern down to the ring form repetition of the verb of speaking. But though the chorus is supposed to be consolatory, the projected speech of praise for the wife, coming on the heels of a projected speech of blame for the husband, has an ironic effect.

Of the six remaining examples of projected opinion in Euripides, three occur in Iphigeneia in Aulis, two in Herakles, and one in the Trojan Women. At I.A. 462–464, Agamemnon contributes to his dilemma by imagining 30 By contrast, in Homer even an enemy's opinion is fully respected (as Diomedes' respects Hector's opinion at II. 8.147–150).

the speech of supplication that his daughter will make. At I.A. 1177–1179, Clytemnestra tries to influence Agamemnon by projecting what she will keep on saying to herself back in Argos, if Iphigeneia is killed. At I.A. 790–800, the chorus imagine what the Trojan women will say at the prospect of slavery. At Troades 1189 ff., as a variation on what people will say, Hekabe imagines what a poet will write on the tomb of Astyanax.31

More remarkable is the sequence in Herakles. In the pathetic aftermath to his madness, during which he has killed his wife and his children, the hero at first resolves to kill himself too. Like Makaria in the Heracleidae, he wonders how he could honourably survive as an exile. He will be bitterly goaded as follows (1289 f.):

\[
\text{"οéviterος λόγος, δεῖ τέκνον ἐκτεινὸν ποτὲ δάμαρτα τ' ἐν γῇσ τῆσαν ἀποφθερήσεται;"}
\]

What distinguishes this from conventional projections of shame (apart from the lack of a formal introduction), is the horrible gravity of the charge. If the charge is true, as it incontrovertibly is, the shame before others is almost forgotten before the horror of the fact itself. That Herakles is not just thinking of what people will say, is shown by the succeeding lines (immediately succeeding, if we follow Wilamowitz). The very elements, so he imagines, will reject him (Herakles 1295–1298):

\[
\text{φωνὴν γὰρ ἥσει χθόνι ἀπεννέσουσα μὲ μὴ θυγάνευς γῆς καὶ θάλασσα μὴ περῶν πηγαί τε ποταμῶν, καὶ τὸν ἀρματήλατον Ἰξίον ἐν δεσμοίσιν ἐκμυμήσομαι.}
\]

And yet this blend of shame and guilt is not intellectually assented to, for, as he says at the end of this very speech, it is the goddess Hera and not himself who is to blame.

In the end, under the influence of Theseus, Herakles decides to steel himself to live rather than to die, perhaps in part as a testimony of innocence. In tears he laments his shattered past, and as he prepares to leave the scene of the killings he hesitates to take up his weapons (1378–1381):

\[
\text{"ἀμηχανῶ γὰρ πότερ ἔχω τᾶδ' ἡ μεθώ, ἀ πλευρά τάμα προσπίτωντ' ἐρεὶ τᾶδε: ἡμῖν τέκνον ἐλεσ καὶ δάμαρθ’ ἡμᾶς ἐχεισ παιδικτόνους σοὺς."}
\]

31 For shameful writing, as opposed to shameful speech, cf. E. Ph. 573 f.
The surreal picture fits his fevered condition. Here a device that properly expresses the values of a shame culture is adapted to express feelings of guilt, by having the weapons rather then the public speak.32

These last passages from Herakles boldly realize such hypotheses as that of the watchman in the prologue of Agamemnon, who imagines what the house would say “if it could give voice.”33 Yet another possibility is to imagine what the dead would say if they could give voice. So in Orestes (408 B.C.), the hero asks his uncle Menelaus to imagine that his dead father Agamemnon is speaking through him (674–677).34 Nine years later we find a similar conceit in Andocides (1.148), and thereafter it becomes a commonplace.

In rhetorical theory, the non-real projection of opinion from the past is a form of prosopopoeia, which in principle could also include projections of future opinion such as the Homeric tis-Reden. But, as we have noticed, in Greek oratory projections of future opinion are usually argumentative and procataleptic in nature. The one exception is a passage in Hyperides’ Defence of the sons of Lycurgus (ca. 324 B.C.): τίνα φήσουαν οἱ παριόντες αὐτοῦ τὸν τάφον; ὃντος ἔβιω μὲν σωφρόνως, ταχθεὶς δὲ ἐπὶ τῇ διουκήτει τῶν χρημάτων εὑρε πόρους, ὥκοδόμησε τὸ θέατρον, τὸ ὕδειον, τὰ νεώρια, τριήρεις ἐποιήσατο, λιμένας τοῦτον ἡ πόλις ἧμων ἠτίμωσε καὶ τοὺς παιδὰς ἔδησεν αὐτῶν.’ (Hyperides fr. 118 Kenyon). The passerby at the tomb in Hyperides’ projection of opinion harks back to Hector’s tis-Rede for his prospective victim in the Iliad, and the chorus’ tis-Rede for the heroine in Alectis. The projection of an epitaph as a shaming device is paralleled by Hekabe’s epitaph for Astyanax in the Trojan Women.

The passage from Hyperides is unusual in other ways. Down to the end of the Hellenistic period, there are only two other instances of a moralizing use of projected future opinion.35 One occurs in Apollonius Rhodius’ Argonautica, in a passage where Medea considers the possibility of first aiding Jason and then killing herself.36 She is dissuaded by the reflection that even suicide would not help her posthumous reputation. Even after death

32 Reproachful weapons also speak in an epitaph by Antipater of Sidon for the tomb of Ajax (Page 7 = A.P. 7.146):

τεύχεα δ’ ἄν οἴς εἰς Ἀχιλλέας· ἄροσεν ἄλκας, οὐ σκολίων μιθῶν ἄμμος ἐφιέμεθα.

33 Aesch. Ag. 37; cf. Eur. Hipp. 418; Andr. 924.

34 Compare also the virtuosity of Menelaus at Hel. 962 ff., where he attempts to influence Theone by invoking her dead father.

35 Post-Euripidean tragedy, had it survived, might have provided further examples.

36 This is the only example of projected opinion in Apollonius Rhodius. His epic, however, contains several actual tis-Reden, e.g., at 2.144–154; 4.1457–1461.
she will be mocked and become the talk of the town (3.793–797):

καὶ κέν με διὰ στόματος φορέωσιν
Κολχίδες ἀλλοε ἀλλοι ἄεικέα μουχόσονται·
"ητις κηδομένη τόσον ἄνερος ἀλλοδνπαίο κάθθανεν, ἦτις δάμω καὶ οὐς ἰσχυνε τοκήως, μαργασύνη εἰζασα. —τι δ’ οὐκ ἐμῶν ἐάσεται αἰσχὸς;

The other occurs in an anonymous papyrus fragment attributable to Cercidas. A modest and virtuous existence is preferable to excessive meddling, which can expose one to shipwreck and to the gibes of one’s enemies (Powell, Coll. Alex., p. 218, 37–40):

τὸ χωρίον τοῦ ὑπποίπτου ἐνεμοῦν τῇ πόλει τῆς Σικελίας ἤπειρον· και τὸ παρὰ τῆς πόλεως τότε ἐπιβλέποντος αὐτῷ ἔργα εὐρίσκοντο τῆς θεοῦ τῆς ἑαυτῶν πόλεως.

The remaining instances of projected opinion in Hellenistic literature are confined to predictions of or wishes for praise. Wishes find their Homeric exemplar in Hector’s hopes for Astyanax (II. 6.479 f.):

καὶ ποτὲ τις εἶποι ‘πατρός γ’ ὅδε πολλῶν ἀμείνων' ἐκ πολέμου ἀνίόντα.

So Hegemon wishes that the passerby of the tomb of the Spartans at Thermopylae will praise them (Hegemon 1 page = A.P. 7.436):37

Εἶποι τις παρὰ τύμβων ἰῶν ἁγέλαστος ὅδιτας
τοῦτ’ ἔπος: ἡ ἄγαλακι ἐνβάδε μυριάδας Σπάρτος χίλιοι ἄνδρες† ἐπάνων αἰμα τοῦ† Περσῶν καὶ θάνον ἀστρεπτεί Δώρος α ἀμέλετα.”

Similarly, Eratosthenes wishes that people will respond to his dedication at the temple of Ptolemy (fr. 35, 17 f. Powell):

... λέγοι δε τις ἄνθεμα λεύσασθων·
τοῦ Κυρηναίου τοῦτ’ Ερατοσθένεος.

Also a wish, though different in form, is Theocritus 12.10–16. But the other examples of projected opinion in Theocritus are flat predictions. So, at 15.126 f., the sources of wool for the blankets of Adonis will proclaim themselves:

α Μίλατος ἐρεί χω τῶν Σαμίων καταβόσκων,
’ἐστρωταί κλίνα τυδώνῳ τῷ καλῷ ἄμμῳ.’

37 Because of the parallel with Homer, Gow–Page are probably wrong to interpret the optative here as potential. Their reference to the speeches of legendary characters introduced by the lemma τί ἵν λέγου; or τίνας ἵν εἶποι λόγους; (as at A.P. 9. 449–480), is misleading. Aside from the fact that the lemma is not part of the poem, the speaker is a particular “historical” character, not a generalized τις, and he speaks on a particular historical occasion in the past, not some hypothetical occasion in the future.
More decidedly Homeric is the conclusion of the idyll to the distaff (28.24 f.), where the introductory formula is modelled on Il. 6.459, and the comment on a gift is perhaps suggested by the tis-Rede at Il. 7.299 ff.:

κῆρο γάρ τις ἐρεὶ τῶπος 'δων σ', ἥ μεγάλα χάρις δόμη σὺν ὀλίγῳ πάντα δὲ τίματα τὰ πάρ φίλων.

From the examples I have been able to collect we can draw the following conclusions. In the literary tradition, the most durable of the Homeric tis-Reden are those that predict praise. On the other hand, persuasive and dissuasive tis-Reden are not found beyond the fifth century. Later projections of opinion with these functions are rare and are non-Homeric in form. Even in tragedy, where projections of opinion are as frequent as in Homer, dissuasive or persuasive tis-Reden of the Homeric type are: associated with Homeric situations (A. Ch. 567–570; S. Ajax 500–504), are romanticizing (S. El. 975 ff.), or are deliberately archaic (Eur., passim). This progressive restriction in the scope of an Homeric device is most probably due to the development of a private ethic that rejects the appeal to a generalized tis.

University of Alberta
The Two Worlds of the Antigone

VINCENT J. ROSIVACH

The chorus of Theban elders begins the parodos of the Antigone by welcoming the rising sun which looks down upon the fleeing remnants of the Argive army defeated the night before (100–109). The chorus then describes the battle itself, which took place at the gates of the city, between Polynoeices and his foreign allies on the one hand, and Eteocles and the forces of Thebes on the other (110 ff.). As prototype of the Argive army the chorus chooses Capaneus, who scaled the wall torch in hand, but was struck down at the very moment he reached the top (βαλβίδων ἐπ’ ἀκρον), just as he was about to shout his cry of victory (131–133). Capaneus never crossed the wall but was thrust outward and downward to the earth below (134 f.). The other Argive leaders were killed in their own unspecified ways at the other gates of the city (141–143), Polynoeices and Eteocles slew each other (144–147), and the forces of Thebes were victorious (148 f.). The fact that Capaneus’ case is the only one specifically described by the chorus strongly suggests that it was meant to be typical of the Argive attack as a whole. If this is so, then the picture which we get of the battle is one of a besieged city, the enemy on one side of the city walls, unable to cross in, and the defenders on the other side, on top of the walls,

---

1 We are to imagine that the chorus sings the parodos as day is breaking and the sun is beginning to rise (E. Coughanawr, CQ NS 23 [1973], 22 f.). The prologue between Antigone and Ismene took place in the dark of night (ἐν νυκτὶ τῇ νυσί, 16); see A. T. von S. Bradshaw, CQ NS 12 (1962), 203 f.

2 The seven gates of the city are mentioned three times in the parodos (101, 119, 141). This particular detail immediately evokes the traditional accounts of the battle (notably Aeschylus’ Septem). It also reminds us that the city was besieged (cf. also ἄμφικαίνων κύκλος, 118), and that the battle was fought at the walls and gates of the city, not on the open field (see also below, note 4).

and hence unable to cross out.² I would suggest that Sophocles had more in mind here than simply presenting a particularly vivid scene to his audience’s imagination, for the wall on which the battle was fought can also be seen as a dividing line which separates two radically different worlds, the world within the city and the world without.

Within the walls is the polis of Thebes, the city which Creon now rules. It is a city of light in the new day which the chorus had welcomed (100–109), a day which they hope will bring forgetfulness of the wars of the past (150 f.). Within the city, and specifically on the stage, the part of the city seen by the audience, Creon is in control, securing the acquiescence of the Theban elders to his rule, ordering about the guard, and determining the death of Antigone. Like the chorus, Creon looks to the future. In his opening speech he tells the chorus what he will and will not do as ruler (175 ff.), and his decree to bury Eteocles and not to bury Polynices is the first step in his implementation of this policy for the future (cf. 192). Indeed, for the greater part of our play Creon seems to be a man with no past. There is no mention of anything which he did before the play began except for the decree, and the decree is repeated in the course of the play (194 ff.) and is thus incorporated into present time. As far as the play is concerned, Creon could just as easily have come into existence when he came into power, at the death of Eteocles and Polynices. Only as the play is about to end do we learn that Creon has a past, when we are told that he was in some way responsible for the death of his son Megareus (1303–1313).³ We shall return to this point below.

Creon forms his judgement in terms of the city, or more precisely in terms of this city. As he sets forth his policies to the chorus, for example, Creon repeatedly uses the demonstrative ἓδε when talking of the city.⁴ For Creon it is not simply a matter of abstract principle, that one should be loyal to one’s own city; his commitment is concrete and specific, to the Thebes which the audience sees on the stage before them. Eventually, of course, in the Haemon scene, Creon identifies the good of the city with his own will rather than vice versa (cf. 734–738); but it is doubtful that he has already done so at the beginning of the play. In his first address to

---

² Thus there is no mention of a Theban sally to complete the defeat of the Argives (as there is in Euripides’ vivid account of the battle, Phoen. 1189 ff.), and we are left with the impression that the Argive army abandoned the fight once its leaders were killed.

³ Teiresias does mention some earlier assistance which he gave to Creon, (993–995, cf. 1058), but this probably also refers to the sacrifice of Megareus, and not to some other event in Creon’s past (see below, note 24).

⁴ 189, 191, 195, 203, 209; cf. ταύτης (189) and the chorus’ use of τῇδε...πόλει (212) in immediate reply to Creon’s initial statement.
the chorus Creon speaks only of the city: its friends are his friends, its enemies his enemies (187 f., 209 f.), and none more so than the traitor Polynceles, who now suffers the fate he deserves, his corpse exposed outside the city as carrion for dogs and vultures (198–206).

The Greeks buried their dead outside the city walls. Within the walls is the world of the living, outside is the world of the dead. Polynceles lies exposed outside the city, and the dead Eteocles must be buried there also (cf. 23–25), as must Oedipus, Iocasta and Laius, the whole clan of Labdacids, all now dead except Antigone and Ismene. Of these two, Ismene chooses to yield to Creon (63–67) and remains within his control in the city. Antigone, however, refuses to obey (47 f.), and so goes to bury her brother, out of the city and into the world of the dead (99).

In the theater this world of the dead lies offstage to the audience’s left, the direction which convention assigns to the countryside outside the city. When Antigone leaves to bury Polynceles, for example, she exits in this direction7 (by contrast, Ismene’s submission to Creon is visibly reflected in her simultaneous exit into the palace). Throughout the play this left side exit is used only as a means of passage to and from the world of the dead, viz. to Polynceles’ corpse and Antigone’s tomb.8 The demonstratives ἐκεῖ and ἐκεῖνος used to describe this outer world and its inhabitants9 also emphasize that world’s remoteness and its association with death.10 7 Antigone must leave by the left (at 99), also to avoid becoming entangled with the chorus which is entering at the same moment from the right (as old men the chorus would be shut up in the city during the siege, and would not be off to the left out in the countryside).

8 Polynceles’ corpse and Antigone’s tomb must be fairly close to each other (and therefore offstage in the same direction), since the burying of Polynceles and the freeing of Antigone are both part of the same expedition out of the city (cf. 1198–1205). At 162, Creon comes from offstage (cf. δεύορο νεώθαι [33] and the chorus’ somewhat lengthy anapestic greeting to Creon [155–161], on which see W. M. Calder, III, GRBS 9 [1968] 393, n. 24), but most probably from the right. There is no reason why Creon would be returning from outside the city (i.e., from the left) if there had been no battle beyond the walls (see above, note 4). Creon’s κήρυγμα is an “emergency decree announced by the voice of a herald, the normal means adopted by a general . . . to announce his will to the population in conditions resembling what we would call martial law” (B. M. W. Knox, The Heroic Temper: Studies in Sophoclean Tragedy [Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1966], 95). It seems more likely that this sort of decree would be promulgated in the agora (offstage to the right) and that Creon would enter from this direction at 162.

9 ἐκεῖ: 76, 249, 777; ἐκεῖνος: 71 (= Polynceles), 525 (= Polynceles and Eteocles), 1039 (= Polynceles), 1043 (= Polynceles); in terms of the following note compare also 168 (= Laius and Oedipus), 170 (= Eteocles and Polynceles), 468 (the more remote obligations to the dead contrasted with the closer threat of death at Creon’s hand), and perhaps 514 (= Eteocles).

10 ἐκεῖ is sometimes used as a euphemism for the underworld (LSJ, s.v. ἐκεῖ, 2), and
While the inner world of the city is concrete and visible on the stage, we never see the outer world of the dead. Instead, our knowledge of that world is indirect, through the reports of others, and as a consequence the outer world seems even more distant, less concrete, and so more mysterious.

Creon attempts to intervene in the outer world of the dead by prohibiting the burial of Polyneices. Although this prohibition was initially proclaimed offstage, Creon himself repeats the proclamation onstage (198–206). In this way the proclamation is dramatically associated with the onstage world of the city and is seen as an attempt by Creon to project his power, which is identified with the city, out into the world of the dead beyond.\(^\text{11}\) The attempt fails repeatedly as Antigone twice buries Polyneices’ body\(^\text{12}\) and Creon himself finally completes the task.

As Creon dominates the action within the city, Antigone determines the evolution of events which take place in the outer world of the dead, by her burial of Polyneices and by her self-determined suicide, which leads in turn to the death of Haemon. As Creon functions in the light of the new day proclaimed by the chorus (100–109), Antigone functions in darkness: in the darkness of the night before the dawn of the parodos when, in the prologue, she determines to bury Polyneices (42 ff.), in the strange darkness of the duststorm when she performs the burial (417 ff.),\(^\text{13}\) and in the darkness of the tomb where she dies and causes Haemon’s death.\(^\text{14}\) As Creon is the man with no past, Antigone is a girl without a future. The only future act which she contemplates is the burial of Polyneices, and this act has been dictated by events in the past. Beyond the burial she foresees nothing but death, and the sooner death comes the more grateful she will be (460–464). Antigone does not even mention her own suicide, \(^\text{11}\) Another example of Creon’s projecting the world of the city into the world of the dead is his assumption that the first burial of Polyneices was the result of sedition within the polis (289 ff.).

\(^\text{12}\) I assume here that both burials reported by the guard were performed by Antigone. For our purposes, only the second burial is significant in terms of the evolution of the play’s action, and this burial at least, it is generally agreed, was performed by Antigone.

\(^\text{13}\) Since the first burial was discovered by the day’s first watch (\(\pi\rho\delta\sigma\varsigma\ldots\ \eta\mu\rho\sigma\sigma\kappa\omicron\omicron\sigma\varsigma\), 253) it too must have been performed in the dark. The motif of lightlessness continues in κοιδεῖς ἔναργης (263), Creon’s ἐκπαινεῖτ’ (307) and φανεῖτε (325), and the guard’s ἔνδηλα καὶ σαφῆ (405).

\(^\text{14}\) At 808 f. Antigone describes herself as νέατον ... φέγγοσ λεύσσουσαν ἀελίου, recalling the ἀκτίς ἄελιον greeted by the chorus in the opening words of the parodos (100); cf. also οὐκέτι μοι τῦδε λαμπάδος ιεράν ἐμμα θέμις ὀρῶν (879 f.), where the sun-eye recalls ἀμέρας βλέφαρον (104). The curse of the Labdacids is itself described by the chorus as a form of darkness, like black sand stirred up from the sea’s dark depths (586–592).
but the actual suicide is itself secondary, for Antigone had already decided upon her own death when she comes to bury Polynoeices (cf. 555). Indeed, in a very real sense she died at that moment, as she says, in order that she might benefit the dead (559 f.), and her suicide is simply the consummation of this predetermined death.\textsuperscript{15}

Antigone looks only to the past, and that past is her family which dictates her present actions. As Creon’s commitment to the city was concrete and specific, to the \textit{polis} of Thebes, Antigone’s commitment to family is also specific, to the royal clan of Labdacids. Antigone repeatedly identifies herself and is identified by others as the child of this family, whose ill-starred history is repeatedly recalled (2 ff., 49 ff., 858 ff.) like a genealogy of misfortunes, suggesting that Antigone too must come to grief (cf. 593 ff.,\textsuperscript{16} 856, 893 ff.). These earlier Labdacids are now all dead, buried and unburied outside the city, and Antigone’s own death will be but a reunion, as she says, with ‘my own’ (\textit{τοῖς ἐμαυτῆς}, 893; cf. 867 f.).

As Creon defines his friends and enemies in terms of the city, Antigone defines hers in terms of her family: he who attacks the family attacks her (31 f.), he who is the family’s enemy is her enemy too (10, 93 f.). The enemy now is Creon, who has refused to allow the burial of Polynoeices and so has intruded himself into the affairs of a family where he had no right to enter (48, 1072). Ismene too is an enemy. She does not agree with Creon, but she recognizes his power (58 ff.), and so refuses to share in the burial. By denying what Antigone considers the legitimate demands of the family upon her (cf. 45 f.) Ismene alienates herself from the family and so becomes an enemy of Polynoeices and Antigone (93 f.).

By acquiescing to Creon’s proclamation Ismene concedes his right to rule. This Antigone will never do. While Ismene speaks of \textit{νόμον} and of \textit{ψήφον τυράννων} (59 f.), implying some legitimacy in Creon’s decree,\textsuperscript{17} Antigone speaks only of \textit{τὸν στρατηγὸν} and his \textit{κηρυγμα} (8). Generals are not kings, and Thebes is not Creon’s. For Antigone legitimacy is only in the past, in the ancestral line of Labdacids, of which she, not Creon, is the sole survivor (\textit{τὴν βασιλείαν μούνην λοιπὴν}, 941).\textsuperscript{18} Antigone and Creon \textsuperscript{15} Even though Antigone has been sentenced by Creon, the chorus recognizes that her death is her own choice (821 f., and Jebb [above, note 3], \textit{ad loc.}). We are thus reminded that in the world of the dead Antigone, not Creon, decides what will happen.

\textsuperscript{16} The notion of the dead influencing the present is clear in these lines when we realize that the \textit{Δεσδακίδαν} of 593 are the dead members of the clan, not Antigone and Ismene; see H. Lloyd-Jones, \textit{CQ} \textit{NS} 7 (1957), 16 f.

\textsuperscript{17} Cf. also Ismene’s \textit{βία} \textit{πολιτῶν} (79), echoing her \textit{νόμον} \textit{βία} (59). Similarly the chorus accepts Creon’s legitimacy and the legitimacy of his decree; cf. \textit{βασιλεῖς χώρας} (155), \textit{βασιλεῖσαν . . . νόμοις} (382), etc.

\textsuperscript{18} Ismene is no longer counted among the \textit{βασιλεῖδα}, since she has accepted Creon’s rule, thereby failing the test of \textit{εὐγένεια} (cf. 37 f.).
have two very different views of the relationship between Thebes and her rulers. Creon, at least in his public pronouncements, sees that relationship in what we might call “modern” terms: that rule depends on the consent of the governed (cf. 666 f.) and should be directed to the good of the city as a whole (cf. 178 ff.). Antigone speaks of Thebes in a much more “primitive” way, almost as if the city were an ancestral possession (γῆς πατρίδας, 806; ἀστυ πατρίδον, 937) to be passed on from generation to generation of Labdacids (cf. 941).

In summary then, we find in our play a series of dichotomies which underscore the basic dramatic conflict between Antigone and Creon:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>World outside the city</th>
<th>World inside the city</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>unseen by audience</td>
<td>seen onstage</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ἐκεῖνοι, ἐκεῖ</td>
<td>ἡδε πόλις</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dominated by Antigone</td>
<td>dominated by Creon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>darkness</td>
<td>light</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>death</td>
<td>life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>family</td>
<td>city</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>looks to the past</td>
<td>looks to the future</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thebes ruled by old royal line</td>
<td>Thebes ruled by Creon</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The separateness of these two worlds, however, is more apparent than real. In the course of the play Creon may twice reject the bonds of family as secondary to the stability of his own rule over Thebes (484 ff., 655 ff.), but in his first address to the chorus he himself invokes the previous rulers of Thebes, viz. Laius, Oedipus and the slain brothers (165 ff.), and justifies his rule precisely on the grounds of his own closeness of kinship with those who had gone before him (γένοις κατ’ ἀγγελεία τῶν ἀνδρῶν, 173 f.). This ill-omened claim of kinship with the dead is hardly an act of familial piety, as are Antigone’s invocations of kinship, but only a political ploy used by Creon to help in consolidating his power in Thebes. In effect, Creon declares himself a Labdacid in order to share that family’s right to rule. In the prologue, however, Antigone (2 ff.) and Ismene (49 ff.) had accounted for their own sorry state as the consequence of the ills of their family, and Ismene had mentioned Oedipus, his wife, and the two 19 In his opening speech to the chorus of elders Creon speaks of the support which the elders had provided for the previous rulers (165 ff.); and, although he does not specifically say so, it is clear that his purpose in addressing the elders is to secure the same support for himself.

20 When Creon speaks of Polyneices attacking γῆν πατρίδαν καὶ θεοῦ τοῖς ἐγγενεῖς (199; cf. Antigone at 937 f.), he means πατρίδαν from Polyneices’ point of view, not his own (i.e., Polyneices’ ancestral land, not Creon’s). Creon’s use of πατρίδαν here is accurate, since Polyneices was a legitimate member of the Theban royal line.
slain brothers (49 ff.). Creon’s invocation of the Labdacids here recalls these earlier “genealogies of misfortune” and suggests that if Creon will share in the rights of the family he will also share in the family’s curse which has brought grief to all the Labdacids before him.

The curse is worked through Haemon. Haemon pleads with his father to release Antigone, arguing that to do so would benefit Creon (701 ff.). The argument is a good one for Haemon to make: by identifying the interests of Creon with those of Antigone Haemon avoids the necessity of making a choice between the two (cf. 748 f.). Creon, however, will not accept the argument, and by repeatedly charging that Haemon’s loyalties lie only with Antigone (740, 746, 748) he finally forces Haemon to choose between himself and the girl. Creon justifies his sentence of Antigone in terms of his own rule over Thebes (730 ff.), but Haemon cannot accept this Thebes ruled as it now is by his father (734–745). Forced to choose, Haemon rejects his father (763 f.) and leaves the city (765). His exit is to the left,21 to the world outside the city walls. This outer world is the world of the dead and, as events will show, it will be the setting of Haemon’s death as well.

At the end of this scene between Haemon and Creon, Creon may still seem to be dominant, but his encounter with Haemon has forced him to make an important retreat. Creon at first justified his intended punishment of Antigone as necessary for stability within the city (655 ff.); but the punishment has become itself a source of civil discord. Creon claimed the universal support of the city for his decree forbidding Polynoeices’ burial (655 f., cf. 508); but Haemon told how he himself had observed the people of the city secretly lamenting that Antigone is to be punished for the burial, but fearing Creon too much to make their objections known (688 ff.). Such is the strength of Haemon’s eyewitness account that Creon can no longer claim universal support. Creon’s “modern” view of his kingship has been that it is based on the consent of the governed. Without that consent now, Creon should yield and free Antigone; but he does not. Instead he abandons his “modern” view and declares that the will of the people is irrelevant (734), and that Thebes is his alone to command (736). Creon has now come to share the “primitive” view of Antigone, that Thebes is the personal possession of her king (738). He has been forced by Haemon’s report to admit that, in this sense, his rule is no different from that of the Labdacids before him.

Creon’s reversal continues. The punishment for the violation of his

21 Haemon leaves by the exit to the left, since he will eventually go to Antigone’s tomb, which is offstage in that direction (see above, note 8).
decree was originally to have been stoning within the city (cf. 36). Now, almost as if to reassert his public posture as protector of the city as a whole, Creon changes the punishment and sentences Antigone to immurement outside the city, in order that the city might escape the pollution of her death (773 ff.). This sudden attention to piety may not be all that Creon claims it is. Stoning is a public act involving the whole community,22 but a public which does not support Creon’s policy would be unwilling to carry out the sentence. Creon avoids the potential embarrassment or worse by changing the punishment to one which can be carried out by his own servants and soldiers, and does not depend on the community as a whole. He thus saves face, but loses far more. Though he does not realize it, by this change Creon in effect surrenders his control over Antigone. The locale of her death will not be the world of the city dominated by Creon, but the outer world of the dead, and her death will be at the time and in the manner chosen by Antigone, not by Creon.

As the play progresses it becomes evident that reality is to be found in Antigone’s unseen world of darkness and death, and that Creon’s city of light and life is, despite the apparent reality associated with the visible stage, nothing but an illusion which Creon’s own actions ultimately destroy. This had been Haemon’s message when he spoke of the civil discord stirred up by Creon’s punishment of Antigone. Teiresias too is a messenger from the city,23 but his entrance and opening words suggest that, though within the city, he is part of Antigone’s world, not Creon’s (or, put differently, that the outer world already extends into the city through Teiresias): his blindness, which is emphasized (988–990), suggests darkness within the city, and in contrast to the city and to Creon, both oriented to the future, Teiresias refers to the past and speaks of help which he has already given to Creon in preserving the city (993–995, cf. 1058), thus giving us the first hint of any past which Creon may have had before the play began.24 Teiresias now tells Creon of the illness the city suffers 23 Teiresias enters from his παλαίον θάκον ὁρνιθοκόπον (999); cf. θάκος ... ἐν οἰωνοκοπεῖ (Eur. Basch. 347), οἰωνίαμετ’ ὀρνίθων μαθὼν θάκον ἐν τεράσιον (Eur. Phoen. 839 f.). The similarity of language suggests that both Sophocles and Euripides are referring to a specific well-known Theban site, which may well be the same as the οἰωνοκοπεῖον Τειρεσίου καλοῦμενον located by Pausanias (9.16.1) in or near the agora within the city of Thebes.

24 The occasion and nature of Teiresias’ past assistance is not here specified, but ἐκ ἑμοὶ γὰρ τήν ἔχεις σῶσάς πάλιν (1058) suggests some recent event: perhaps Teiresias’ advice that Creon offer his son’s death to save the city besieged by the Argives (cf. Eur. Phoen. 947–952; Megareus’ death is referred to later in our play, 1303); a recent event is also suggested by 994, if we retain the present tense of the verb as in the manuscripts (see because of him, polluted by the shreds of Polyneices' corpse which scavenger bird and beast have carried to the city and its altars (1015 ff.). Polyneices was unable to penetrate into the city while he lived, but his corpse, left unburied at Creon's command, now enters the city to befoul it after his death. In forbidding Polyneices' burial Creon had attempted to extend his control outside the city into the world of the dead; but his attempt failed, and now Polyneices and Antigone, both outside in the world of the dead, will exact Haemon's death as Creon's punishment for his mistreatment of them (1066 ff.). Creon's mistreatments of Polyneices and Antigone were political acts which denied the ties of family; but now Creon will be punished through these very family ties he had earlier denied.

It remains only to play out the inevitable. Creon leaves the stage, his world of the city, and goes into the world outside, the world of death (1114). Here obligations to the dead must override concern for those who still may live: Polyneices must be buried first.25 In this world of dead Labdacid, Polyneices, the last dead Labdacid, must have his due from Creon, the man who has chosen to be his kin (cf. 173 ff.).

Creon now goes to Antigone's tomb (1204 ff.). As we have seen, Creon surrendered his control over Antigone when he sentenced her to immurement outside the city. The outer world is Antigone's to dominate, and since Antigone now controls all, Creon must fail. Antigone must be dead by her own choice and hand (1221 f.) precisely because Creon would now rescue her (cf. 1111 f.). Haemon still lives, but in the tomb, the innermost recess of this world of death: now he truly belongs to Antigone. Creon enters the tomb (1226 f.) and beseeches Haemon to come out (1230); but it is too late. Creon had earlier forced Haemon to choose between himself and Antigone. Now that choice has been made, and Haemon will not leave Antigone. In a silence which seems deathlike in contrast to the cries of Creon (cf. 1226 f.), Haemon draws his sword and rushes at the intruder (1232 f.). For Creon is no longer his father, but the enemy26 whom Hae-

---

A. C. Pearson, CQ 22 [1928], 187). H. D. Brackett, CQ 12 (1916–1917), 526, also sees in the αδ of 996 (φρόνει βεβωλας αδ νον ε'νει ξυρον τύχες) another possible reference to the death of Megareus.

25 It is clear from the sequence of commands at 1108–1112 that Creon recognizes the necessity of burying Polyneices first. Creon has no reason to believe that Antigone will commit suicide (or may have already done so), and so her release would not appear to require the same haste as the burial of Polyneices, the remains of whose body already pollute the city (cf. 1015 ff.); see also J. S. Margon, CP 65 (1970), 105–107; Brackett (preceding note), 531–534.

26 Thus Haemon "spits" at his father (1232), as earlier Creon had told him to "spit" at Antigone and treat her as an enemy (653); in both cases πτώνας is probably meta-mon would kill. The blow misses and Haemon turns the sword upon himself (1234–1236). His rejection of Creon27 and his union with Antigone are now complete. As Haemon falls he embraces Antigone (1236 f.),28 corpse upon corpse as bridegroom and wife, their wedding chamber a tomb (1240 f.).

When Creon left to bury Polyneices the chorus sang an ode (1115 ff.) whose theme of deliverance for the city of Thebes, deliverance represented by the image of light, recalls the similar theme of the parodos. But while the parodos was confidently set in the light of a dawn which had already appeared (ἐφάνης, 103) to replace the past night of danger, the present ode is set in sickness and pollution (cf. 1140–1143), from which the chorus prays to be rescued by a still future appearance of Bacchus (προφάνηθ', 1149). The nature of the rescuing light is also different in the two odes. In the parodos, the chorus sang of a new day which, by its nature as day, totally replaces the darkness of night. Bacchus, on the other hand, is a nocturnal god, and his light is a light which shines in the night but does not fully dispel its darkness.29 By the way in which they invoke Bacchus as a bringer of light, the chorus reminds us that Thebes itself has now become a city of darkness, not the city of light promised by the parodos.

The city of darkness is also the city of death. In rapid succession Creon enters bringing Haemon’s body from the tomb (1257; cf. 1258 with 1266), Eurydice’s corpse is revealed within the palace (1293), and we learn of the earlier death of Creon’s other son, Megareus (1303). The purpose of this accumulation of deaths is not simply to overwhelm the already humbled Creon in a sea of grief. Rather, each of these deaths has its place in the patterns we have been examining. Haemon died outside the city, and the entrance of his corpse is a visible sign of the penetration of that world of death into the heart of the polis. Eurydice, on the other hand, died within the city, and the appearance of her body on the stage serves phorical, “expressing contempt and disgust” (see most recently P. Mazon, RP, 3e série, 25 [1951], 14).

27 Haemon’s suicide (like Eurydice’s) is an act intended to punish Creon, and not simply a gesture of hopelessness or insanity (see M. Delcourt, “Le suicide par vengeance dans la Grèce ancienne,” Revue de l’histoire des religions 119 [1939], 161–163).

28 On these verses see also C. Bonner, “The Death of Haemon (Ant. 1236–1237).” Classical Studies Presented to Edward Capps (Princeton, 1936), 24–28; Bonner reads παρθένον in place of παρθένοι at 1237, as more appropriate with προσπισθέντας in the sense of “embraces”; see further G. Müller, Sophokles: Antigone (Heidelberg, 1967), ad loc.

29 Cf. στρόφω . . . λυγνίς (1196 f., referring to the smoky torches carried by the god’s devotees in their night revels; cf. Jebb [above, note 3], ad loc.); πόρ πνεύμων χορόγ γάστρων, νυκτῶν φθεγμάτων έπισκόπε (1146–1148); σε . . . πάννυχοι χορεύνουν (1151 f.).
as a visible counterpart to that of Haemon's (cf. 1298–1300). In this sense at least the world within and the world without are both seen to be the same: both are settings for death. While Haemon and Eurydice are of the present—both die in the course of the play—Megareus is of the past. Indeed, Creon's acquiescence to Megareus' death is the only thing we ever learn of Creon's past. Through most of the play that past had been completely shut out of Creon's new world; but now, as the illusion of that new world crumbles, the past penetrates into the present through Eurydice's suicide in grief for the deaths of both Haemon and Megareus (cf. 1303 ff., 1312 f.).

Amid this destruction of family the city which Creon would rule is now forgotten. Creon who once seemed to control all is now seen to control nothing. Events flow under their own impetus to the final destruction of his house, and Creon is powerless to stop them. In claiming his throne on the grounds of his Labdacid connections, Creon also took upon himself that family's curse, and now this man who made himself a Labdacid must see his family perish, as all the Labdacids had perished before him. Creon who would rule κατ' ἀγχιστεία τῶν ὀλωλότων (174), has now become, like them, an ὀλωλότ' ἀνδρό (1288).

The new day which the chorus had proclaimed fairest of all (100–104) was an illusion. The new Thebes of light and life, the dominance of Creon, the primacy of the polis were all illusions too, but the illusions are gone. The old Thebes which we saw in the prologue could not be shut outside and forgotten, and now it has returned, present and real upon the stage. In this Thebes of family, darkness and death, Creon prays for the one day which will truly be fairest, the day which will be his last (1328–1333).

Fairfield University

30 From Eurydice's entrance on stage (1180), to hear of Haemon's death, until the end of the play Thebes is mentioned only once, and then in a quite unimportant way, when the messenger suggests that Eurydice may have gone into the palace to keep her grief private, and not to broadcast it to the city (1247–1249).

31 Creon's death is metaphorical (he is an ζημυχος νεκρός for whom life is no longer worth living; cf. 1166 f.); but the word ὀλωλότ' does link him with Eteocles (174, 195), Polyneices (174, 1029), the whole of Antigone's family (894), and the dead Haemon (1240), all of whom were previously described by the intransitive perfect of the verb ὀλωλομ. Creon's description of himself as an ζημυχος νεκρός also links him with the punishment which he sought to impose on Antigone (cf. 774).

32 I have taken some liberty in my paraphrase of 1328–1333 in order to point out more clearly the similarity between this passage and 100–104 (πανήσω ... κάλλιστό ... ἀμέραν, 1329 f. ἀμέραν ... ἀμέραν, 100–104).
Does Euripides Call the Gods μακάριοι?

MARIANNE MCDONALD

It is likely that Euripides never applied the term μακάριος to the gods.1 Arguments, however, must be found to show why Page and Biehl are wrong when they translate μακάριος as an epithet of the gods in Antiope 45 and Orestes 972, respectively.2

Lexica and etymological dictionaries regularly describe μακάριος in terms similar to those in Liddell-Scott: I, “mostly of men,” and II, “of states, qualities, etc.”3 Μακάριος is never given as an epithet of the gods. Μάκαρ, on the other hand, is applied to both gods and men from the time of Homer,4 and the lexica concur with Liddell-Scott’s description of this term: “prop. epith. of the gods, as opp. mortal men.”

A brief look at the history of the term μακάριος may help us understand Euripides’ usage. The word is first found in the 5th century, in Pindar (P. 5, 46 Snell). The only other writers in the 5th century who use μακάριος are Euripides and Aristophanes. In P. 5, 46, Pindar calls the victorious victor μακάριοι.

---

1 This claim was first put forward in my dissertation Terms for Happiness in Euripides now published in Hypomnemata 54 (Göttingen, 1978), 231 f., 238 f., 296, 301 f.

4 See note 3; the references in Homer given by Chantraine are: “ὁ μάκαρ Ἀτρείδη (II. 3, 182), ἄνδρος μάκαρος pour un homme favorisé des dieux, qui est sans souci comme un dieu (II. 11, 68).”
charioteer μακάριος for achieving fame after great toil. In other people’s eyes he shares in a sort of divine glory. In this poem the king for whom he is driving the chariot is called μάκαρ (20), as is the king’s hearth (11). A local hero, Battus, an ancestor of the king, is also called μάκαρ (94), as are the gods themselves (Κρονίδαι μάκαρες, 118). One can see the ranking:
gods, hero, king (all μάκαρες, “divine”), and then the victorious driver (μακάριος, “sharing in godlike glory”). It is understandable that the driver would be on a level lower than a king, who is, of course, μάκαρ (e.g., II. 3, 182). De Heer says that μακάριος may describe a person as “one who shares to a certain extent in the distinction of being μάκαρ.”

Aristophanes uses the term μακάριος in the same way as Euripides, in that it usually describes men. Aristophanes also applies it unambiguously

5 C. de Heer, ΜΑΚΑΡ-ΕΥΔΑΙΜΟΝ-ΟΛΒΙΟΣ-ΕΥΤΥΧΗΣ: A Study of the Semantic Field Denoting Happiness in Ancient Greek to the End of the 5th Century B.C. (Diss. Utrecht, Amsterdam, 1969), 31. De Heer has no example of μακάριος as applied to the gods, and when “sense components” are given for each of these four terms (p. 57), μακάριος shares seven components with μάκαρ; after component 7, de Heer states, “For μάκαρ the same numbers apply with the addition of 8: applied to the gods.”

Although de Heer’s work is helpful in many ways, one must use it with caution. In two tables (pp. 106–151), he says that he includes all the occurrences of the words which are the subject of his study, and then bases percentages on these occurrences (p. 58).
However, he has omitted over 50% of the occurrences of these words in Euripides’ fragments, and thus his percentages and statistical inferences are bound to be inaccurate. The following is a list of his omissions: Alcestis, εὐτυχών 1122, εὐτυχῶν 1158; Medea, εὐδαιμώναι 1025, εὐδαιμονόντων 1073; Hippolytus, δῆλον 626 (however, 625 f. are generally regarded as spurious); Hecuba, εὐτυχῆ 330, δῆλου 493; Heracleidae, εὐδαιμονίτης 582, εὐτυχῆς 641; Andromache, δῆλον 100; Supplices, δῆλοι 5, εὐδαιμονεῖ 577; Electra, εὐδαιμονίας 231, eὐτυχος 1077, εὐδαιμονίας 1291; Troades, εὐτυχόδος 45, εὐτυχίσσεις 699, εὐτυχόντως 1162; Helena, εὐδαιμονίας 953 (LP reading adopted by Kannicht, rejected by Murray); Iphigenia
i. T., εὐτυχὴς 329, εὐτυχιστέρος 352 (LP reading rejected by Murray), εὐτυχόδος 837, eὐτυχίσσεις 841, εὐτυχίσσεις 850, εὐδαιμονέα 1088, εὐτυχίσσεις 1121, εὐτυχίσσεις 1183; Ion, εὐτυχίσσεις 1505; Phoenissae, εὐδαιμονίας 1086, εὐτυχίσσεις 1163; Cyclops, μάκαρ 459: read 495); Iphigenia
i. A., εὐδαιμονεῖ 1161; Bacchae, μάκαρος 1243.

The following are the omissions in the fragments (Nauck): εὐδαιμονεῖ 45; εὐτυχῆς 47.2; εὐτυχόντα 99; εὐτυχεῖν 142.4; εὐτυχό, εὐτυχό 143.1 f.; εὐτυχεῖ 154.2; εὐτυχεῖν 262.3; eὐδαιμονεῖ 273.3; εὐτυχεῖ 285.12; ηὐτυχον 285.20; δῆλον 330.8; εὐδαιμονόντων 362.31;
eὐτυχόντα 402.2; εὐτυχόδος 409.1; εὐδαιμονεῖ 461.1; εὐτυχεῖ 463.4; εὐδαιμονοῦσιν 536;
eὐτυχεῖν 608.3; εὐτυχίσσεις 626.7; εὐδαιμονεῖ 661.1; εὐτυχεῖ 701; εὐτυχίσσεις 730; εὐδαιμονίαν
745.2; εὐδαιμονίαν 778; εὐτυχόντα 901.5; εὐτυχήσεις 1017; εὐτυχεῖ 1025.1; εὐτυχίσσεις
1056; εὐτυχίσσεις 1056.3. Page, Select Papyri (1941; Loeb, vol. 3): Antiope, εὐτυχή 15; μακάριον
45; εὐτυχῆ 102; Hysipyle, δῆλον 79; ηὐτυχεῖ 115; εὐτυχές 128; εὐδαιμονής 304; 305; eὐτυχίσσεις 324; Melanippe, δῆλοι 7. Nova Fragmenta Euripidea, ed. C. Austin: Aristeas, eὐτυχίσσεις 19.11; Erechtheus, 65, μακάριος . . . εὐδαιμόνων col. II, 17; εὐτυχή col. II, 18; eὐτυχή col. V, 58. Also omitted are all the Alexander fragments; in addition to 45, 47.2, Snell fr. 6.8.
to the “blissful departed.”6 Again, in his works, the gods are never called μακάριοι. In Euripides, μακάριος describes men 27 times, and 17 times things rather than human beings;7 but these things can be easily associated with human beings (such as χείρ, οἶκοι, γάμος).8 It is never applied to the gods.

There are two late uses which may be mentioned here. (1) In Aristotle (EN 1178 b 9) the gods are said to be μακάριοι καὶ εὐδαίμονες because they engage in contemplative activity (ἐνέργεια θεωρητική), which is said to excel in bliss (μακαρίστη).9 This predicative usage, however, is different from an attributive one.10 Authors previous to Aristotle do not even go this far. (2) Epicurus, in Ep. I, 78; I, 81; III, 123, and Κύριοι δόξαι 1, links the term μακάριος with ἄφθαρτος; in Ep. I the divine nature of celestial bodies is indicated, and τὸ μακάριον in Κύριοι δόξαι 1 describes the nature of the gods. Since these authors postdate Euripides, their usage does not support the interpretation of μακάριος in Euripides as an epithet of the gods.

6 Euripides does not use μάκαρ unambiguously as an epithet for the dead, except in the phrase “isle of the blest” (μακάρων . . . νῖνοι, Hel. 1677). Μακάριος, however, is used to describe and praise the dead hero Erechtheus (65, col. II, 17 Austin). Both terms are often used ambiguously by Euripides, in cases where the person described is dead or will be; but the person addressed takes the term as a simple one of praise. The divine departed are most likely those described in Aristophanes Ranee 85 (Agathon is said to have gone ἐς μακάριον εὐωχιάν). In his Τεγνήσταυ τ’ θεοῖν ἀνόδεσσαν, fr. I.6–11 in A. Meineke, Fragmenta Comiciorum Graecorum (1857, reprint Berlin, 1970), II, 2, 1148.

7 De Heer gives 41 occurrences of μακάριος in Euripides (p. 146), omitting Antiope 45 (Page), Ebrechtheus 65, and Bacchae 1243.

8 The one possible exception is really no exception. In Bacchae 1171 θήρα is called μακάριον by Agave. Her hunting is seen as a divine thing and, ironically enough, the prize “beast” is her own son. Thus in this case too the association is all too human.

9 Professor Peter Colaclides was kind enough to point out a passage in Plato’s Phaedrus (247 a 4) where μακάριος and εὐδαίμονες appear in close connection with the gods and μακάριος is specifically linked with θέα (sights, a concrete form of θεωρία). He also pointed out 250 b 6, where the vision (ὁφις τε καὶ θέα) of beauty is μακάρια, seen σὲν εὐδαίμονα χρώμα, and this is the most blest of the mysteries (μακαρίωτάτη τῶν τελετῶν) and also εὐδαίμονα φάσματα. Aristotle goes much further with his image of the gods as blissful from their contemplation; but he no doubt owes much to Plato for the initial imagery of happiness linked with the gods and with a vision of beauty and goodness.

10 See note 3. In contrast to μακάριοι, the majority of instances of μάκαρες in Homer show it modifying θεοί; e.g., II. 1, 406; 4, 127; 14, 143; μάκαρες describes the gods in an absolute sense in Od. 10, 299. Euripides has parallel instances (e.g., fr. 453.2; Med. 825), and he applies this term to things more than to human beings (see Terms for Happiness [note 1], 295). In El. 994, Hel. 1348, Ba. 378, 1339, and fr. 912.12 μάκαρες by itself signifies the gods; in all of the other cases where it refers to the gods, some word like θεός appears.
Page, however, translates μακαρίων αθένος βρόχωσι καταδεί [τον άδικον], at Antiope 45 f., as "The might of the blest gods binds down the unrighteous man in the meshes of a snare." Given 5th century (particularly Euripidean) usage, μακαρίων is perhaps better translated "of the blest," referring to men, not gods. This is probably a general statement by the chorus which can be specifically applied to Lycus, an unrighteous tyrant whom Zethus and Amphion, two heroes (blest men?), have just overcome, thus enforcing divine justice (cf. Antiope 46 f., quoted below). There are parallels in Euripides which show a tyrant meeting with just destruction. In fact, another Lycus, also a tyrant of Thebes, is slain by the hero Heracles for his evil deeds, and the comment is made by Amphitryon that Lycus is entering the net of swords (βρόχωσι δι' άρκνων ... ξυφήφοροι, HF 729 f.). The chorus see this as a just return for evil (734–774), and the gods (θεοί, 771) punish mortals (βροτώς, 775) for unjust deeds (αδίκων, 772), which is a parallel to βροτώς δ' αδ' τέχνοις [τ]ϊς ἔφυγεν θεί' ον; of Antiope 46 f. Both the situation and the imagery of the two passages are parallel.

On the other hand, Wilamowitz' restoration μακαρίων is by no means the only possibility: for instance, ἄγριών might be a better reading, appropriate to the hunting imagery (cf. HF 1210, κατάχεθε λέοντος ἄγριου θημών). There is another possibility too: Euripides often calls a tyrant μακάριος, or if not a tyrant, someone who is powerful and wealthy.

Many times he comes to a bad end as a result of his evil deeds. It would seem, in Euripides, that wealth and power are corrupting agents if they are exclusive source of happiness (i.e., a reason why people are called μακάριοι). Lycus was a tyrant who could be called μακάριος on account...

---

11 Page follows Wilamowitz in adopting the reading μακαρίων here; Wilamowitz' complete reading is φονίοσ μακαρίων.

12 The image of the net/snare is a frequent one in the Oresteia: Agamemnon's crimson robe becomes the net of his destruction (see Clytemnestra's speech, Ag. 1372 ff., and Fraenkel, Page, ad 1382). In Euripides' Bacchae the net image describes Dionysus' snare for Pentheus, and the term βρόχος appears again (Ba. 1020 ff.; cf. also 848).

13 In dealing with the word-end -ρίων, one may either interpret it as belonging to a word in close association with οθένος, or as an independent genitive, modifying or associated with something omitted. If it is linked with οθένος it may have either a positive or a negative meaning, depending on whether one regards the strength as coming from the gods/heroes or the wrongdoer. For example, the following words (all of which occur in Euripides) could belong in the positive category: ἀλεξηθήρους, καίρους, κύριος, λυτήρους, σωτήρους. In the negative category appear ἄγριος, άμεσος, θυρίος, λάθριος, ἄλθριος. For the metrics involved, see J. Kambitsis, L'Antiope d'Euripide (Athens, 1972), 111, and H. J. Mette, Lustrum 12 (1967), 74.

14 Terms for Happiness, 296, sections I and III.

15 Cf. HF 1425 f., ὡσις δὲ πλοῦτον ἡ οθένος μᾶλλον φιλῶν | ἄγαθῶν πεπάσθαι βούλεται, κακῶς φρονεῖ.
of his wealth and power, but he abused these resources and came to a bad end: μακαρίων in Antiope 45 might refer to a class of tyrants who took unjust advantage of their resources and were punished. Thus one might read something like this: ὁ θεὸς μακαρίων σθένος βρόχοις καταδει, “god binds down the might of ‘the blissful’ in the meshes of a snare,” ( paraphrasing Page).

The interpretation given μακαρίων as “of blest heroes” may have some parallels in Euripides, too. Agave describes Cadmus as μακάριος because of the heroic deeds accomplished by his daughters (Ba. 1242 f.); so also the prize “beast” is called μακάριον (Ba. 1171, see note 8). Then the “hero” Dolon will be called μακάριος if he achieves the heroic tasks which will make him famous (Rh. 196).16 In each of these cases tragic irony is involved; Amphion and Zethus are more truly heroic than these “heroes.”

Various solutions to ἱδρίων have just been suggested. The only solution which is not possible, given Euripidean usage, is the one chosen by Page, namely translating μακαρίων as “of the blest gods.”

Now let us look at the passage Orestes 971–975, as interpreted by Biehl, who seems to make the same error. The context of the passage also deals with the downfall of a tyrant:

βέβακε γὰρ βέβακεν, οἶχεται τέκνων
πρόπασα γέννα Πέλοπος ὁ τ' ἐπὶ μακαρίοις ζηλος ὥν ποτ' οίκος' φθόνος νῦν ἐλεθεόθεν, ἀ τε δύσμενης φοινία

ψήφος ἐν πολίταις.

975

973 ζηλος Musgrave: ζηλωτός codd. οἴκος Musgrave

Biehl translates μακαρίως as “bei den seligen Göttern” (in 1965),17 while commenting (in 1975): “ἐπί... ζῆλος: nescio an tmesis sit (i.e. ἐπὶζηλος?): ὁ... ἐπὶ μακαρίως ζῆλος ὥν ποτ' οίκος ὡς ὁ (τοῖς) μακαρίως ἐπὶζῆλος ὥν ποτ' οίκος (‘domus, quae olim dis praeter omnes aemulanda erat’).” If, however, one accepts Musgrave’s οἴκοι for οίκος, the interpretation seems to be easier: the tyrant’s house is described as once μακάριος (cf. Tr. 363, πόλιν... μακαριωτέραν). A parallel passage may be found in Or. 4 f., which describes the fall of Pelops’ father Tantalus, a man 16 One must be careful in citing this as an example of Euripidean usage, because the Rhesus may not be by Euripides: see Terms for Happiness in Euripides, Appendix II, pp. 309–314. Compare, however, W. Ritchie, The Authenticity of the Rhesus of Euripides (Cambridge, 1964), 345 ff.

17 In a footnote (p. 81), de Heer comments on Biehl’s rendering, “this must be due to faulty construing.”
who once was μακάριος: in both cases human happiness is regarded as transient.

But with the transmitted reading οἶκος one may find a suitable meaning for ἐπί μακάριοις: "the house once envied for bliss," (Wedd; ἐπί denoting the grounds of the envy, μακάριοις being used as a neuter substantive);¹⁸ "la maison dont la félicité était jadis un objet d’envie" (L. Méridier).¹⁹

One can understand why Biehl thinks Pelops’ house might be a special object of envy (ξῆλος) “in the eyes of the blest gods,” in view of the following line, φθόνος μν εἰλε θεόθεν. But the image seems to become stronger if we see μακάριοις as representing the height from which the line of Pelops fell, rather than as a simple parallel to line 973. Orestes 4 ff. describe this fall from bliss. (Compare the μακάριοι τύραννοι, El. 709 f., whom the masses come to adore and for whom disaster is imminent; once again these μακάριοι τύραννοι are from the line of Pelops. The chorus tells of the tyrants’ fall from bliss because of their evil deeds, and human weakness is opposed to divine might, 727–746.)

There are other instances, too, where μακάριος (never μάκαρ) describes the powerful and wealthy in Euripides: Troadēs 1170 (Astyanax) and Orestes 86 (Helen and Menelaus). In the former case Hecuba’s use is pathetic (Astyanax is now dead). In her dirge she speaks of the happiness which might have been his and would have come from his youth, marriage and ἰσόθεος τυραννίς, royal power which would have made him the gods’ equal, thus μακάριος. However, she quickly adds, εἰ τι τῶνδε μακάριον (Tr. 1170), speculating herself on whether externals such as marriage and royal power are true sources of happiness (influenced no doubt by her present experience).²⁰

In Or. 86 Electra’s use of μακάριος is ironic (as it is in Electra 1006, when she calls Clytemnestra’s hand μακαρία). In both cases she is vividly aware of her lowly station in contrast to these royal beings (Helen, Menelaus, and Clytemnestra), and she plots to destroy their “bliss” by murder. Murder seems to be a constant threat in Euripides to the μακάριοι, and there also seems to be a play on this word as an epithet for the dead. Thus, ¹⁸ N. Wedd, Euripides, The Orestes (Cambridge, 1926), 121.

¹⁹ Budé, 1959, translating F. Chapoutier’s text: ξῆλος . . . οἶκος. The majority of the editors, however, adopt Musgrave’s conjecture οἶκος, including G. Murray (1913), A. S. Way (Loeb, 1912), V. di Benedetto (Florence, 1965).
²⁰ See Terms for Happiness, 213 f. Ion too questions royal power as a source of happiness (Ion 621–632); if a man lacks peace and must always fear for his life, can this man be called happy? In both cases (Hecuba’s and Ion’s) μακάριος seems to describe a man who can be at peace and enjoy a life of ease and security, such as the gods enjoy, and a tyrant does not fit this description.
whenever Euripides uses μακάριος to describe people elevated above mankind because of their wealth and power, some sort of contrast is implied, and in most cases a fall has already occurred or is about to occur. The question is raised also about the value of this type of happiness, possibly on the grounds that it is not lasting; it is certainly not carefree. One thinks of the maxim which has haunted Greek literature since the Solon–Croesus confrontation (Herodotus 1.30–32): do not call a man happy until his death.21

In conclusion, μακάριος at Orestes 972 most probably refers to οἶκος, not to “the blest gods” (Biehl): “the house of Pelops, once an object of envy for its bliss.” It is highly unlikely that Euripides was using μακάριος, in either Antiope 45 or Orestes 972, in such a strikingly novel fashion as Page and Biehl claim. If he used it as a synonym for μάκαρ as an epithet of the gods, it would be contrary to his own practice, and that of his contemporaries.

University of California, Irvine

21 See Terms for Happiness, pp. 22–24.
The manuscript tradition of Aeschines' orations has not been examined in breadth and depth.\(^1\) The last attempts at classification and elimination \(^2\) were before the age of microfilm. Several manuscripts of some importance (the Ambrosian especially) have not been examined at all. The mass of variant readings reported by Schultz (1865) is the available source for the tradition as a whole,\(^3\) but it is incomplete and inaccurate for the primary mss. and overburdened with secondary mss. The latest editors (in the Budé series) collated some primary mss. in Paris and thus present most of the valid evidence for the text of the orations. The text of the prolegomena and scholia is still far from adequate.

The tradition is represented by one ms. (\(f\)) of the late tenth century, five (\(Vakix\)) of the thirteenth and fourteenth, and almost fifty of the

\(^1\) Cf. E. Drerup, ed., Aeschinis quae feruntur epistolae (1904), who throws some light on the mss. of the orations. Drerup overlooked codd. Marc. gr. VIII 20; Ambros. gr. 247; Matrit. 4693.

\(^3\) F. Schultz, ed., Aeschinis orationes (1865). I shall cite the text of Aeschines by the numbered variants in Schultz' text and apparatus, as Heyse has done. I follow Heyse also in the symbols for the mss.: small letters for the mss. collated before Schultz, mostly by Bekker, except \(x\), added by Heyse; and capital letters for those added by Schultz (\(ABFLV\)) and myself (\(CDMPRSWT\)). The old Coislin ms. (\(f\) in Bekker and Heyse and here) is \(F\) in Schultz.
Renaissance. A Patmos codex of the early tenth century has brief excerpts from scholia on Demosthenes, Thucydides, and Aeschines,⁴ and a bifolium from a fifth- or sixth-century codex from Egypt contains Aeschines or. III 178-186.⁵ There are several fragments of papyrus from the first to third centuries; they are from all three orations but most from III.⁶ The numerous quotations by ancient rhetoricians are often repeated by medieval authors, but there are quite a few independent medieval citations of Aeschines’ orations.⁷

The standard medieval tradition, which I shall call β, carries prolegomena consisting of Αἰσχύνος ἰδίτορος βίος (vita 1), Απολλώνιον εἰς Αἰσχύνων εξήγησις (vita 2), and ὑποθέσεως (arguments) for the three orations. The three orations are accompanied by copious scholia and followed by the twelve epistles. This standard tradition β is represented by the old mss. AVx and several later independent mss. (mgL and parts of DS). The three other old mss. are outliers of β: f has all three orations and twelve epistles without the prolegomena and with only some of the scholia of β. k has only III II (sic) without arg. and with very few scholia. i has only II without arg. but with ample scholia. While β is a cluster of independent mss., fki are actually the parents of their families, as was shown by Heyse for f and is evident now for k and i also.⁸

The scholia⁹ of β are preserved to the end of III only in Se and their offspring. L quits β at III 251, x at 246, V quits the scholia at III 156, g at 88, m at 18, a at II 120. The scholia in β were numbered by hundreds for reference, with corresponding numbers in the text. There are ca. 270 scholia on I, 297 on II, 440 on III. This rather fragile system is preserved

---

⁴ Codex Patmiacus 263. See J. Sakkélon in Bull. de corresp. hell. 1 (1877), 1–16; 137–155; 177–194, and Revue de philol. 1 (1877), 182–188, esp. 154 f., 181. The scholia are from all three orations of Aeschines, in the usual order, and agree in part with the scholia of β.

⁵ Pap. Rainer inv. 8030, Pack No. 17.

⁷ G. Klinke, Quaestiones Aeschiniae criticae (Leipzig, 1897) collects the testimonia earlier than the editio princeps (1513). It is tedious to separate the primary (independent) testimonia from the secondary (repeated). Among medieval readers of Aeschines may be mentioned Photius, the Suda, Tzetzes, Greg. Pardus of Corinth, Thomas Magister.

⁸ The four genera recognized by Schultz correspond in the main to β/ﬁ/kí with their respective offspring. Weidner, Blass, and Heyse use the symbol A for the family of k (and i), B for the standard tradition β, and M or C for the family of f. But in or. I, where k is lacking, Weidner, followed by Blass, ineptly transferred A from k to f.

⁹ Sauppe (1850) and Dindorf (1852) edited the scholia from fîm, Schultz (pp. 249–355) from fmgVL. Schultz later found the missing end of the scholia in e.
in aVxm as far as they go, but LSί modify it. Three scholia at the head of III are extra seriem, unnumbered: (a) ή στάτις . . . , (b) τινές εἶπον . . . , (c) οὐ δεῖ . . . (Schultz pp. 151 and 315): DWE have (a) (b) without (c), f has only (a).

Some other useful marks of the main mss. may be mentioned. In or. I, which is found only in β and f, seven false documents are interpolated in the text of β but omitted in f: I 12 16 21 35 50b 66 68. Or. I has a longer ending in f (expl. εἰςτάξει) than in β (expl. καταλειπται). The excerpt ἵππις ηosphate . . . ἐφάνως (Schultz pp. 5 f.) is found only in f and i (and their offspring), in f after the end of II, in i in the margin at the beginning of II. It belongs to II, but some apographs of S wrongly attach it to III.

— In the frequent expression ὁ ἀνδρεῖς ἀθηναίοι the β-mss. usually omit ἀνδρεῖς; f begins with ἀνδρεῖς but soon drops it; k has it in III and as far as II 24; i has it all through II. The mss. agree in the less usual ὁ ἀνδρεῖς without ἀθηναίοι and ἀνδρεῖς ἀθηναίοι without ὁ. 10 f writes δ over ω, and θ or θθ over ω or α, and k and even β-mss. have traces of this tachygraphy, which is ancient and occurs elsewhere in the tradition of the Attic orators.11

The textual variation in β/κ̄ is frequent but mostly superficial. Few variants are from majuscule or word-division,12 very many from slight transposition and omission or addition. In I neither β nor f has much advantage; their texts are equally readable, each sometimes corrupt. In II III k veers between f and β, or perhaps, as Weidner put it, f veers between k and β, but f/k seem closer than fβ; there are conjunctive errors all three ways: f/k, β/k, fβ. k has more singular readings than f or β, especially in III. i is problematical: at first it agrees often, though not always, with k, but after II 40 this agreement virtually ceases and i goes with β; but i has more singular readings even than k, most of them transpositions, none certainly genuine.13 From this evidence no image of a ninth-century archetype emerges. Apart from interpolations, corruptions shared by all (β/κ̄) are not very frequent and are evidently ancient. The recension is open, and eclecticism is the principle on which the modern editors have established the text. However, this does not deny the elimination of secondary mss.

The isolation of β is confused by the sporadic occurrence of f- or fκ̄-

10 Om. ὁ I 78 121 164, III 177 (fβ) 209 (fβ) 211 (fκβ); om. ἀθηναίοι I 177 (f), II 4 (f) 7 (fβ) 24 (fβ) 69 (fκβ) 129 (fβ) 183 (f); δικαστεί 1 78 164, II 24 (ki) 102 (i bis) 129 (f).
11 H. Diels and W. Schubart, eds., Didymos Kommentar zu Demosthenes (1904), p. 3.
12 Majuscule variants: I 7710 10111, II 8g 2219 4910 1168, III 293 829 1032 1679 18; minuscule variants: II 158, III 1408 16514 2353 2394; word-division: I 445, II 2116 2219 377 4910 818 10214 1108 1628, III 7210 12613 1498 1792 1901 2275 2468.
13 i is supported by a papyrus in two singular transpositions (II 749-751), but I still cannot believe that i draws on a tradition different from β/κ̄. Cf. Martin-Budé I (1927), p. ix.
readings in β-mss. We may begin with the major omissions. At I 879 9211 1965 omissions are shared by all the β-mss., and at I 1622, II 3213 15912 omissions are shared by the cognates xL. On the other hand, at II 12413 1602 omissions are shared by f¹k. But other omissions do not follow the branches of the tradition. In II 91 mxL omit in the text but supply in the margin, and a has an equivalent incipient omission, but fkiV do not omit. At II 1826 aL² omit and mg have an equivalent incipient omission, but again fkiVx do not omit. At III 223 axL omit, but fkmgV do not. Perhaps these cases may be explained as omissions supplied in the margin in the archetype of β. But there are other omissions shared by fkJ with some β-mss. At II 1112 f¹kV¹L¹ omit, but f¹k omit one more word (ἀλλά) than V¹L¹; iamgx do not omit. At III 203 fkJL² omit, while amgV and a papyrus do not; at III 867 f¹xL¹ share an omission. Omissions of f¹m²L¹ at II 1548 and of k¹V¹ at III 2514 may be merely coincidental.

The following list is a selection of other variant readings of f or fkJ occurring sporadically in β-mss.

I

291 ei fxL ἢ amVD
395 ἄν εἰς τὸ σῶμα fVD εἰς τὸ σῶμα ἄν amxL
472 ἔξεργάσασθαι fxL ἔξεργάζεσθαι amVD
515 μέτριον fa μετριώτερον mVxLD
522 δοκεῖ τοῦτω fD τοῦτω δοκεῖ am(V)xL
559 δὲ famD om. VxL
566 om. fD οὕτος amVxL
581 παρὰ fa ἂπο mVxLD
595 ἐτερά τινα f τίνα x ἐτερά amVLD
6417 ἔχειν fa ἔσχε mVxLD
785 αὐτοὶ fmD αὐτὰ aVxL
795 ἐνοχὸς fm³D ἐναγχὸς amVx om. L
8015 ὅτ’ ἂν fa ἢ ἂν mVxLD
906 ἔρημίας fV¹x ἔρημία amLD om. V
9116 ἀνήρτηται fD ἀνήρτητ’ ἂν amVxL
958 τιμομάχου faxD τιμάρχου mVL
1007 ὑμῖν μεταγ. fVx μεταγ. ὑμῖν amLD
1115 om. fxD ἐφη amVL
1418 -μένως famVL²D -μένους VLS
1565 παντολέοντα faxL παντολέοντα mVD
1574 ῥαμνησίου fxL ῥαμνοσίου amVD
1579 παραμένοντος fmxL παραμένοντα aVD
17013 τὰς φύσιας fVxL τὴν φύσιαν amD
1793 ἐκ- famL ἐμ- VxL
II 89 ἐμοῖς fa ἄλλοις kimVxL
125 om. fVi περὶ kamxL
143 ἐγ- famxLi ἐπι- kVL
151 ὑπὸ fkiam m ὑπὲρ mVxL
155 ἐγ- fmVxL om. kia
1513 οἱ fkiam om. VxL
2111 δὲ f(a)mxL om. kiV
2912 καὶ μετὰ fki x om. amVl
356 om. fam ἐτι kiVxL
365 μόνον fa μόνον kimVxL
398 αἰτίου fa x(L) ἐκ τοῦ ἐναντίον kimV
415 om. fkaV μου xLi
499 οἰκ. πραγ. fkiamV πραγ. οἰκ. axL
529 om. fka ἄλλα mVxLi
553 om. fka ἐπει mVxLi
554 κατένευμε fka κατάνειμαι mVxLi
559 οὐμ- fkaV om. VxL
5811 παρὰ fkiV ἀπὸ amVxL
623 βουλεύουσα fkaL βεβουλευóου am(V)i 643 μαρτ. δημ. fka δημ. μαρτ. amVl(i)
6913 om. fkaV μᾶλλον mxLi
8217 ἀπηρκ. fkaV amVxL ἀπειρηκ. xDi
934 ἐπιβολήν faV ἐπιβολήν kimxL
941 ἐν- fkaL ἐπ- amVl
949 om. fkaV ἐμὲ VxL
951 δόμου fka νόμου αἰμVxL
961 κατηγορεῖσ fka κατηγορεῖσ mVxLi
989 ἐν- fmV om. kaL
1093 ὑπ- fkiacL ἐπ- Vx
1132 om. fkaL καὶ ἀνακαταντίαν (αἰ)V
1213 om. fkaV καὶ xL
1212 ἐπει. ἐπιστ. fkaV ἐπιστ. ἐπει. (V)xLi
1257 om. fkaV λόγουs amVlL
12510 om. fkaV πολλάκις amVxL
1404 ὀπλιτῶν fka πολιτῶν mVxL
1411 om. fkaV τῶ φιλίτσω συνάντον xL
1445 πορνεῖας fka πορνηίας mVxL
1488 ἐπὶ τῶν τριάκοντα faLi om. kamVx
1489 πολιτικῶν fka fκιαm πολιτῶν VxL
1524 om. fka δέυρο mVxL
1546 εἰς fa om. κκ ὡς VxL κ ὡς eis mi
Aubrey Diller

1547 γεγενημένην fkimVxL om. aL
1571 -μενος skia -μένην mVxL
1643 ἐκεῖνω fkm amx Li ἐκεῖνων V
16410 om. fkm καὶ VxLi
1665 ἀποστερήσας fam ἀποστερήσας κι ἀποστερήσας VxL
1736 om. fka τοῖς τὸσ ὡς mVxL
1758 om. fka καὶ VxLi
17720 ἡ fkm τῇ ἡ VxL ἡ ἡ ἡ i
1797 γ. fkm ὅλων amVLi
17912 ἔν ὅργῃ fmixL(i) om. kaVL

III

38 om. fam ἡ ἡ κVxL
39 εἶναι fV om. kmxL
74 μικρὸν fkmL om. amV
814 τῶ νόμοι fam τοῖς νόμοις VxL
112 οὕτως fkmVx om. aL
133 om. faxL των κVx(L)
236 τοῦτο fkmL τοῦτον amV
277 ἀλλοι famV om. kxL
279 τοῦτων famxL τοῦτων kVL
279 -μελησιμο. fmVxL -μελησιμο. ka
293 ei famx οί kVL
332 om. fVxL οὖν kam
397 om. fam περὶ κVxL
4616 om. fka καὶ mVxL
544 om. famL ἀπάντων (k) VxL
573 ἀπο- fV1L ἐπι- kmVxL
579 om. fam ἀπάντων κVxL
6016 μετὰ fxl om. kamV
613 τῶν ἀλήφων fkmxL om. amxL
623 τοῦτο fVxL τοῦτο kam
632 πρὸς fam ὡς κVxL
647 om. faxL ὥτ' ἡν 2ο kmVL
6712 om. fV ὡς kamxL
712 om. fam ὑπ- κVxL
739 λέγω καθεξ. fV καθεξ. λέγω amxL
753 om. fam ἡν 2ο VxL
762 αὐτοῖ fam αὐτῶν Vx αὐτῶ L om. k
763 om. fam δ' ἡθ. (k) VxL
7616 τρία fkmV om. axL
7619 καταγελ ... ποιῶν post eis θῆβας 2ο fkmV post 1ο axL
777 ἐβδόμη δ' ἡμέρα fx ἐβδόμην δ' ἡμέραν kamVL
om. famL अपोलेसος kmVL
788 ποτε fX om. kanVL
812 τόν faV om. kmxL
818 δωρ. ζηλ. fκfκVxL ζηλ. δωρ. amL
821 καὶ γανίδα f(k) V om. amxL
842 om. f καὶ k τρία amV καὶ τρία xL
844 μεγίστης famVxL θαυμαστῆς kVxL
948 τούτους f(a)mxL τούτων kV
987 om. fam ὕμων kL ἦμων Vx
1013 om. fa φησι kiVxL
1037 om. fka πρὸς φιλιππον f"mVxL
1051 ταύτζ fκx τάν τισ amVL
1101 μόνων τόν ὄρκον faV τόν ὄρκον μόνον mx τόν ὄρκον L
1112 ἐπείρωται famX ἐπείρωσθαι kVxL
1113 μηδὲ fam μήτε kVxL
1179 γε fκαxL om. mV
1183 λέγων fam om. kVxL
1203 om. fam τῶν προγόνων kVxL
1265 διεγράφατο fκxL διεπράξατο amVL
13213 ἐτέρων fκVxL om. amxL
13216 ἐν δελφοῖς fam om. kVxL
1376 οὐδὲ fκmxL οὐ aV
1391 ρήτωρ καὶ οὗτος fκxLⅠ om. amVxL
1397 ρήτωρ fκxLⅠ om. kamVxL
1403 τῆς faV τῶν kmxL
1635 τῶν fκxL om. kamV
16318 θῶ fκαxL θεῶ mVLⅠ
1684 -βλέψητε fV -βλέψητε amxL
1706 om. fam καὶ αὐτὸν kV αὐτὸν xL
1711 ἦν fka om. mVxL
1716 om. fκαmxL ἀπόδημος xⅠL ^m
1754 αὐτῶ fV om. kamL
17817 -πέπλυται fκm(V)L -πέπλυται axLⅠ
1814 περὶ fκα(m)L om. Vx
1818 τὰς τάξεις fV τὴν τάξιν kamL
18111 ἐπικαλούμενος fκxLⅠ om. amL
1825 κάκεινοι fκx κάκεινο amVL
1834 χρόνον fV πάνω k πάνω . χρόνον am(x)L
1843 πασῶ fκαmx πάσω VxL
20219 om. fκxL κατηγόρητα kamV
20312 ταύτας famL ταύτα kV
The irrational distribution of these readings in the mss. may be attributed to various causes of deviation from simple lines of descent: (1) double readings14 in the common archetype, including glosses and scholia; (2) contamination of β-mss. from f; (3) intentional intervention by scribes and correctors; (4) fortuitous coincidence. But altogether they do not seem to account for the phenomenon satisfactorily. A similar puzzling situation exists in several later mss., where contamination appears in such a form as to postulate either too many lost Vorlagen or else that the scribe was copying from two Vorlagen at once; see codices ixSFp, not to mention still later ones.

I shall deal now with the individual mss., in stemmatological order as far as possible, as in the following list. I have microfilm of twenty mss., as indicated; for the others I rely on published descriptions and collations. I regret I could not use watermarks for dating the mss., and that I have not recognized more of the scribes. In compensation, I have tried to find the earliest ownership of the codices. Unless stated otherwise, the mss. are of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries and are of paper (the parchments are fVBpce and Ottob.). Merely for economy I shall omit references to the standard catalogues of mss. given in Richard’s Repertoire (21958).

β  amgVx L: vitae, arguments, three orat. with scholia, twelve epist.
   a  Rome, Angelicus gr. 44 s. XIII
   m  Paris. gr. 3003

14 Double readings are evident in β or βf (not k) at I 912 713 822 8611 12715 16812 1842, II 1517 316 355 4413 586 7317 7364, III 99 451 613 844 9116 1719 20714.
Copenhagen, regius 415: I only Vind. ph. gr. 156: II only Paris. gr. 3004: III only
Vatic. gr. 64 mbr. a. 1269/70
Wolfenbüttel 902 mbr.: om. scholia
Ambros. gr. 247
Madrid 4693
Laur. 57,45: om. epist.
Vind. ph. gr. 59: vitae arg. only
Marc. gr. VIII 2: om. scholia
Istanbul, Panaghia Kamariotissa 158: I only Laur. conv. soppr. gr. 84: I only
Marc. gr. 442: om. epist.
Ambros. gr. 455: adds vitae arg. scholia
Leonardo Bruni a. 1412: Latin trans. of III
Vat. Barb. gr. 159 mbr.: without scholia
Laur. acquisto 50: without scholia
Marc. gr. VIII 20: III I II epist.
Laur. 58,6: epist. II I III
Ambros. gr. 26: III I II, om. epist.
Phillipps 8077: II III without scholia, epist., [I]
Vat. Pal. gr. 134: II III
Ambros. gr. 316: with scholia
Ambros. gr. 297
editio princeps 1513: without scholia, om. epist.
Paris. gr. 2998 s. XIII: III II without scholia
Dle: III II [I]
Ambros. gr. 409: adds vitae arg. scholia
Paris. gr. 3002
Marc. gr. VIII 4 mbr.: om. I, adds scholia
London, Harley 6322: II only
Paris. gr. 2996 s. XIV: II only, with scholia
Laur. 60,4: III II [epist.]
Moscow gr. 475: II III
Vatic. gr. 67: all of β but in disorder
Urbinas gr. deperd.
Vatic. gr. 72: I II III with scholia
Paris. gr. 2947

Gotha 572: III [I]

Vat. Ottob. gr. 254 mbr.

Vatic. gr. 1392
Vat. Barb. gr. 53
Naples II E 28
Salamanca 223
Istanbul, μετόχοιν 10
Athens, βουλή 23 s. XVIII

III Vatic. gr. 1585
Vatic. gr. 2362
Vatic. gr. 1949
Naples II E 11
Laur. Ashburnham 1640
Lisbon
Bucharest 603
Vatopedi 736 s. XVIII

— Oxford, Bodl. 6561: vitae arg. only
Vat. Pal. gr. 51: scholia only Paris. suppl. gr. 1344 s. XIX: scholia only.

(a) Rome, Angelicus C.3.11 (gr. 44): bomb. s. XIII 318 leaves 25 × 15.5 cm. in 39 quat. and one ternion (297–302) signed α-μ. Fol. 240v 277v and parts of 237v 238v are blank, apparently because of poor paper. Fol. 3–212 Aristides,15 213–317 Aeschines complete β except that the scholia are incomplete and virtually cease at II 120, though blank numbers continue to II 136. A second hand begins with quire 35 (fol. 273, in II 182). The script is uncalligraphic, but the text is good. The only major omissions, apart from conjunctives, are at III 142, 166, 166 (σ' ἔφη . . . πόλεων) 2145. An interpolation preceding III 177, επεὶ ἐνταῦθα λοιπὸν ἐπιλογίζεται, matches the scholion ad loc. in Se ἐντεύθεν λοιπὸν ἐπιλογοι. There is correction and collation by the first and later hands, usually agreeing with f and particularly with Y (from fM).16 which in turn has readings from a. — This codex was in the collection formed by Cards. Guido Ascanio Sforza (d. 1564) and Alessandro Sforza (d. 1581).17 It was collated by Bekker and (in I) by Heyse. I have microfilm.

16 2a I 8015 1227 14936 17810, II 1295. The long ending at I 1965 is added. At I 1767 the misreading λοιπὸν occurs only in I* and a* (Heyse 12), not in DY; it may have been in v.
17 Studi ital. 6 (1898), 172. On the Biblioteca Sforziana see G. Mercati in Studi e Testi 164 (1952), 15–146.
(b) Vatic. Barber. gr. 22 (olim 263): 304 leaves 169 x 114 mm. Fol. 79–196 (in eleven quint. and one quat., 118 and 193–196 blank), Aeschines β without scholia and epistles, written by a non-Greek hand. 18 — This codex belonged to Lattanzio Tolomei of Sienna (d. 1543). 19 It was collated in I by Bekker and Heyse, who both recognized it as an apograph of a.

(m) Paris. gr. 3003: 222 leaves 22.3 x 14.5 cm. Fol. 1–126 Aeschines in 15 quart. and one tertonion (57–62) signed β′-ιζ, fol. 127–222 scholia on Aristides in another hand. Aeschines is complete β except that the scholia cease at III 18. The text often agrees with a against VxL. Major omissions at I 1006, 1893, II 11611, 1548, III 1678 σῦ θεταλοῦν ἀφιστάναι (non om. σῦ γὰρ ... ἀφιστάναι) 1685, are supplied by the first or later hands, and a large repetition in III 65 is deleted. Spaces for the scholia are taken out of the main column on the page. The scholia are numbered: 272 on I, 297 on II, 38 on III; sch. III abc and a few others are extra seriem. 20 There is correction by several hands on the epistles (Derrup) and a good deal in III, less in II and I. In I some of it is from p, 21 in II III it is from fή, from k alone after III 113, 22 actually from Ῥή, which are from fΜ and after III 113 from kl. In III the same corrections sometimes occur in m2h2 and even g2, 23 and a few corrections in m2h2 seem to be from g. 24 Codd. mgʰ all belonged to Janus Lascaris (d. 1534). 25 A corrector has also introduced an un-Greek feature, that is, the Italian practice in cutting lines, such as δ′ transferred from the end of a line to the head of the next. There are a few conjectures and interpretations in the margin, e.g., question-marks in III 130, ἵσως λυπιέλα III 1438a (cf. Diodorus 16.88). — Codd. mg were collated by Taylor, Bekker, Dübner (the scholia for Dindorf), Heyse. I have microfilm of m.

(ο r) Copenhagen, regius 415: 150 leaves 28 x 21 cm. Fol. 121–150 Aeschines I 1–174 (the end lost) in a different hand from the preceding parts, copied from m (Heyse). This codex belonged to John Locker of London (d. 1760) and to Anthony Askew (sale 1785 No. 579). Collated by Taylor for Reiske (r) and by Bloch for Dindorf (ο) and by Heyse, who showed that r and ο are the same.

18 G. Mercati in Studi e Testi 46 (1926), 149 n. 2.
19 Mercati, pp. 138–156, Aggiunte, pp. 5 f.
20 Corrections are mistakenly numbered as scholia at II 322 1548.
21 pm2: I 113 5018 667 9 794 5 9013 12413.
23 m2h2: III 56 573 9 757 931 5 1016 1166 1567 1719 1855 (from Plutarch) 18611, also 1 667 9, II 1386.
24 gmʰ2: III 491 1079 1651 1937.
25 Mélanges d'arch. et d'hist. 6 (1886), 258, Nos. 70 (m), 89 (h), 90 (g).
(v) Vind. ph. gr. 196: 46 leaves $228 \times 165$ mm. Aeschines II copied from $m$ (Heyse) by Constantine Mesobotes ca. 1500 (Hunger). Collated by Bremi (1824).

(n) Paris. gr. 3004: 170 leaves $203 \times 146$ mm. Aeschines III with arg. and Demosthenes 18, written by Georgius Hermonymus and annotated by Guillaume Budé (d. 1540). Or. III is copied mostly from $m$, but in 227 it begins to agree with $f$. Collated by Bekker, inspected by Drerup for Heyse.

(g) Paris. gr. 2930: 169 leaves $28 \times 21$ cm. Fol. 1–117 Isocrates, 118–167 Aeschines, 168–169 Dion Chrys. Aeschines begins without vitæ and arg. as an apograph of $A$ (from $f$), but in I 21 it switches to $\beta$, closely akin to $m$ but independent of $m$; the epistles are omitted. However, both parts are contaminated (Heyse); the first has the documents and scholia of $\beta m$. The scholia cease at III 88 (at III 18 in $m$), but a bit of scholia is in the text at III 1079, also II 119. There are several unique long scholia (Schultz p. 251), doubtless untraditional. Some correction in III coincides with $m^2$.

(V) Vatic. gr. 64: mbr. 290 leaves $318 \times 205$ mm. in three parts by different hands, the third dated fol. 289v a. 6778 (A.D. 1269/70). The second part (fol. 147–225, ten quat. a–e lacking the last leaf) contains Aeschines and Socratic epistles, the latter in part unique. Aeschines is complete $\beta$ except that the scholia cease in III 156 (fol. 194, the end of quat. s). The text is rather erratic and sometimes even illiterate. I count twenty singular omissions, some of then supplied between lines by the first hand. In I there are fenestrae. In III variant readings of $k$ have been entered extensively by a coarse hand. — This codex has supplements and annotations by Cardinal Isidorus Ruthenus (d. 1463) and probably belonged to him. It was collated by Schultz and (in I) by Heyse. I have microfilm.

(φ) Wolfenbüttel 902 (Helmstedt 806): mbr. 226 leaves $21 \times 13$ cm.

27 E. Drerup, ed., Isocrates opera omnia, I (1906), pp. XXIX, LV. Isocrates in $g$ is not nearly akin to Isocrates in $A$.

29 Scholia III abc are at the end of II, fol. 181v. A bit of scholia in the text at I 1247.

30 Vita 227, or. I 6415 663 14914, II 279 374 1115 119 15618, III 1296 1725 2554, supplied by the first hand; II 6021 1164, III 2514 1306, supplied by the second hand from $k$: III 6210 855 1033 1678.

31 I 243 256 7 4119 4716 4810 491 6 19 etc.

32 G. Mercati in Studi e Testi 56 (1931), 522.
Fol. 1r–165r Aeschines complete $\beta$ except the scholia, 165r–203r Socratic epistles, 203r–226v Dionysius Halic. Lysias. The whole codex derives from $V$, but with much divergence in the texts, so that the derivation has been disputed. As $p$ does not have secondary correction, there must have been an intermediate between $V$ and $p$. In I fenestrae of $V$ have been filled from an $f$-text, but the major omissions of $V$ remain. However, in the documents, lacking in $f$, it is the reverse: the omission at I 662i is supplied, but the fenestrae at 5013 24 remain; at 5018 $p$ reads καθεξόμενος with $a$ (not $V$). In II $p$ is heavily contaminated from $i$. In III it is less heavily contaminated from $k$, as is $V$ itself, but the contamination in $p$ is independent of that in $V$.

A subscription says Georgius Chrysococces wrote this codex for Giovanni Aurispa; this was probably when Aurispa was in Constantinople in 1421–1423. Later the codex belonged to Guarino Veronese (d. 1460). It was collated for Reiske (1771) and by Baiter and Sauppe (1840). Heyse demonstrated its derivation from $V$.

Milan, Ambros. D 71 sup. (gr. 247): 152 leaves 30 $\times$ 22 cm. Fol. 1–85 Plato, 86–90 Aeschines' epistles (Drerup om.), 91–152 Aeschines I II III without scholia, preceded by vitae and arg. The end of III (225–260) and the epistles are by a different hand. The first hand copied from Guarino's codex $p$, the second from $m$. There is some secondary correction in I: fenestrae and omissions of $Vp$ are supplied from a $\beta$-ms. There are also marginal indices in Greek and Latin. — This codex and the next have not been examined or even mentioned before for Aeschines. I have microfilm of both.

Madrid 4693 (olim N 63): 135 leaves. Fol. 1–112 Aeschines, 113–135 various epistles. The ms. of Aeschines is an apograph of Ambros. gr. 247 with its corrections, but the arg. are distributed to the heads of the respective orations and the epistles are at the end (103–112). A subscription fol. 112v says Constantine Lascaris wrote this ms. in Milan; Lascaris

34 $f\beta$: I 2416 17 257 4011 4918 559 641 868 1708, etc.

35 Blass (1896), p. XI. Schultz (1865) put $p$ in his fourth class with $i$.

36 $p$ shares several omissions of $V$, even some supplied by $V^2$, but does not share unsupplied omissions of $V$ at I 662, II 279 374 1115 11910 15618, III 1725 2554.

37 A. Diller (see on ms. S), pp. 318 f., No. 23.

38 Readings of $m$ or $mg$ at III 2264 10 2274 22812 2298 2312 2352 23612 2385 8 2393 245 16 17 2501. In III 234 there is an incipient omission of one line in $m$ (113v 11 εφαρμοσάν ... ϕάσαι). The ms. ignores the corrections in $m$.

39 Readings of $\beta$ in correction at I 5012 13 24 6414 1195 1795.

40 These epistles, in part unique, were copied from cod. Ambros. gr. 81, see Studi ital. 9 (1901), 479–488.
left Milan for Messina in 1464. There is secondary correction throughout, in part at least by Lascaris himself; it is from v. 41 Fol. 1r infra Lascaris has written φαοίν ὃτι πρῶτος ἀλαχίνης τὸ θέλωσ λέγειν ἥκουσε διὰ τὸ σχεδιάζειν ὡς ἑυθονισών (Suda αι 347).

(x) Paris. suppl. gr. 660 fol. 31–89 and 94–157 (olim 1–123, fol. 90–93 and 158 blank paper): s. XIX 24 × 17 cm. Fol. 31–89 Synesius, 42 94–157 Aeschines in six quint. plus four leaves, one leaf missing after 153 (lacuna III 202 ὑπομνήμω [ὑμᾶς . . . 213 σφόδρα] πονηρώ), the last leaves worm-eaten. Aeschines is β, but in III 247 it switches to κ and the scholia cease, and the epistles are lacking. There are some readings of k even before III 247. 43 The script is uncalledigraphic but the text is good, 44 more like α than V. — This ms. was among those acquired by the Bibliothèque Nationale from the heirs of Minoides Mynas in 1864. 45 It may be the Aeschines seen by Dr. E. Zachariä in the Laura on Mt. Athos in 1838. 46 It was collated by Heyse. I have microfilm.

(L) Florence, Laur. 57,45: 312 leaves in small 4°. Fol. 2–79 Lysias I–XXXI (om. II V VI), 80–97 Lucian and Cebes, 98–245 Herodian hist. and Aeschines, 246–253 anonymous opuscula, 254–312 various epistles (including Aeschines'). Aeschines is β (vita 1 is on 173r beneath the end of Herodian) ending at III 251; a later hand has added III 252–260 without scholia (from Σ, but not BP, perhaps Laur. 58,6). The ms. is messy and inaccurate, even illiterate. The text is akin to x, as Heyse found in I and I find in II III. 47 There are omissions supplied and double readings, mostly in a different script, but I do not think by a different hand or from a different exemplar. 48 — This codex was one of those purchased for Lorenzo de' Medici by Janus Lascaris in Candia (Crete) 3 April 1492. 49 It was collated by Schultz. I have microfilm.

Vind. ph. gr. 59: 254 leaves 285 × 205 mm. Fol. 1r–77r Lysias as in L, 41 I 556 6215 7011 14932 46 . . . III 626 13511 16610 1679 1707 1984 20512. At vita 110, however, Lascaris supplies ἐν θῆβαις from a β-ms.

43 kr: III 2351 2397 8 2401 24310 2448 2456 2464, etc. At III 2592 x omits παρ’ οὔδὲν μὲν . . . τὸ ἐκ μηδον χροσίων because of an incipient omission in k.
44 Unique major omissions in x: I 1178 10 1410, II 2820 21 14276 1451, III 10313 18513 2478 2592.
46 E. Zachariä, Reise in den Orient (1840), 258.
47 xL: II 42 271 3213 348 415 463 481 (ἐν αὐτῷ) 891 1411 15912 18258 (κάσιον), III 21 910 244 333 1114 16114 1408 (εὐερείτη) 1723.
48 But see III 12210 αὐτον κΛ’ (om. cett.).
49 Rivista di filologia classica 2 (1894), 416; 422: Lisi oraciones et Escinii in uno volume. P(ap).
77v–87r Lucian de dea Syria (in L), 87r–90r vita 2 and arg. only of Aeschines as in L 173v–175v, 90r–120r epistles and opuscula (in L), 121–166 Polybius, 167–254 Herodian (in L). The whole codex, except Polybius, seems to be copied from L.

Venice, Marc. gr. VIII 2 (colloc. 1388): 297 leaves 214 × 144 mm. in four parts by different hands: (a) fol. I, 1–31 Lysias I–IX as in L followed by vitae and arg. of Aeschines; (b) 32–125 Aeschines I II III without scholia; (c) 126–213 Apollonius Dyscolus; (d) 214–297 epistles of Phalaris Alciphron Brutus. Parts (a) and (b) were apparently copied from L. — This codex came from Sts. John and Paul (see on ms. e). It has not been collated.

(f) Paris, Coislin 249: mbr. 168 leaves 252 × 177 mm. 37 lines. The script is of the second half of the tenth century; it has a good deal of tachygraphy, some of it rather unusual. Fol. 1–76 and 148–168 contain opuscula of Synesius, an oration of Lysias and one of Gorgias, and Marinus Vita Procli (unique). Fol. 77–147, in nine quart. (α–θ) contain the three orations and twelve epistles of Aeschines ending abruptly (the last leaf is lost), without the prolegomena (vitae arg.) and with some scholia. Another hand begins quart. δ (fol. 101r at II 19); the preceding leaf has only six lines of text with a notice ων λειτυ(ει) τι, followed by a list of the ten Attic orators with numbers of their speeches (see fol. 100r, 100v is blank). In I the seven documents of β are omitted, and the text has the long ending (98r, 1 196 εκεράζεων). The excerpt οτι ἡδουνήη fills 116r after the end of II. Schol. III (a) is on 116v above the heading, III (bc) are lacking. The scholia, written in small majuscule, are mostly excerpts from the more copious scholia of β; Schultz does not report them completely. There are major omissions at I 92, 15, II 154, III 127, 167, supplied by the first hand, and at I 149, II 11, 124, 13, 160, III 86, supplied by later hands, and at I 152, III 10, 10, not supplied at all. The text is often altered by various hands, contemporary or recent; Drerup distinguished four hands. In I II this alteration usually agrees with β and may be either contemporary correction (f°) or recent collation (f²); but some of it is unique and even arbitrary (I 511 2410 476 6215 1108). In III, where the alteration is much less, $f^2$ usually agrees with $k$, hence is mere correction of $f^1$, but not at III 1263, 1647. The apographs $KAM$ ignore much of $f^2$ after I 88, but $S$ agrees with $f^2$ mostly throughout. — This codex seems to be one of those obtained in the East by the Greek priest Athanasius Rhetor for Pierre Séguier in 1643–1653. It has been collated several times, by Bekker, Cobet, Schultz, Drerup (in the epistles), Heyse, and others. I have microfilm.

50 Devreesse says the codex has 22 quires. It is not clear how 97 leaves form 13 quires (without fol. 77–147, α–θ). I suspect that fol. 148–168 belong at the head, so as to bring all of Synesius together and put the second hand (fol. 101–147) at the end.

51 Edited by W. Studemund in Hermes 2 (1867), 434 f.

52 The long omission in III 126–127 is supplied in the lower margin fol. 128v but interlarded with scholia so as to be unrecognizable.

(K) Istanbul, Patriarchate, Panaghia Kamariotissa 158: 296 leaves $210 \times 140$ mm. Fol. 267–291 Aeschines I without arg. or documents, ending abrupt 291r at I 141 τοὺς εἰρημένους ἑτ; the page is full, but 291v has only irrelevant scribblings; fol. 292–296 do not belong to this ms. The ms. is a manifest apograph of $f$, with a few of the scholia. —This collection of codices was in the island of Chalke in the last century. I have photocopied taken from microfilm in the Dumbarton Oaks Library.

(A) Florence, Laur. conventi soppressi gr. 84: 202 leaves 296 $\times$ 215 mm., "egregie scriptus." Fol. 1–178 (178 blank) Isocrates, 179–202 (three quat.) Aeschines I only without arg. documents or scholia, copied from $f$ (Heyse). — This codex was in the collection formed by Antonio Corbinelli (d. 1425), which was lodged in the Badia di Firenze until 1811. It was collated by Schultz.

(M) Venice, Marc. gr. 442 (colloc. 554): 199 leaves in 12°, in three parts by different hands: (a) fol. 1–86 mostly Libanius; (b) 87–174 Aeschines; (c) 175–199 six monodies by one Alexius Lampenus (fourteenth century) found only here and still not printed as far as I know. Fol. 87–166, ten quat. ($a$–$i$), have Aeschines' orations as far as III 113 τὸ πεδίον copied from $f$: vitae arg. and seven documents in I are lacking, I ends ἐξεταζέων, II is followed by ἤτα γνώριζαν. In I 39 a single line of $f$ is omitted: εὐκλείδου ... ἐγένετο. The scribe failed on the sign for ἐστι in $f$ at I 93 2213 1665, and on the sign for πρὸς at I 45 459a 1200 1524, II 111a, III 140.

55 H. Omont, Missions archéologiques françaises en Orient aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (1892), I, p. 21; II, p. 853, No. 30.
58 E. Drerup, ed., Isocratis opera omnia, I (1906), pp. XXIV n. 46; XLIX.
59 Followed by an anonymous epistle de imperio, Studi Italiai. 1 (1893), 149; 308–313.
60 R. Blum, La biblioteca di Badia fiorentina e i codd. di Ant. Corbinelli, Studi e Testi, 155 (1951), 77, No. 28; 117; 161, No. 79.
Most of the scholia are omitted. In II III M has collation by second hand, usually agreeing with β. This seems to be the same hand and from the same source as the continuation fol. 167–173 (174 is blank), which ends III 151 ἐπὶ δὲ τὴν παρὰ. It seems to be from F. 62 — This codex was No. 300 in Bessarion’s donation of 1468. It has not been collated. I have microfilm.

(S) Milan, Ambros. J 22 sup. (gr. 455): 382 leaves 222 × 143 mm. in 47 quart. and one ternion (α-μη). 63 Fol. 1–248 Themistius, 249–382 Aeschines: vitae and arg. 249r–253r (253v blank), I 254r–288v, II 289r–321r, III 322r–371v, epistles 371v–382v. The text of Aeschines is written regularly (25 lines a page) and legibly and accurately. Chapters are signalized by rubricating the first letter of the first full line, but the rubric initials are often not supplied. The text of the orations is from f in the main: I has the long ending and II is followed by ἐπὶ ηγομνηθη (321v); the readings agree with f and the early and late corrections in f almost constantly. But there are important elements from β: vitae and arg. and documents in I (except 50) and complete text of omissions not supplied in f at I 15212 and III 1274, also some β-readings passim. 64 There are significant conjunctives with V, 65 and Drerup found the epistles to be from a source like V; but this agreement with V is only partial, some of the β-readings cannot be from V. Most of the scholia are added without numbers in margins and between lines by a second hand in smaller and finer script; they include scholia III abc (321v) and continue clear to the end of III as only in e elsewhere.

— This codex, which is primary for Themistius, 66 was one of those bequeathed to S. Giustina in Padua by Palla Strozzi in 1462. 67 It has not been collated for Aeschines. I have microfilm.

Leonardo Bruni Aretino translated the two crown speeches, Demostenes 18 in 1406 and Aeschines III in 1412, also Aeschines’ epistle 12. 68

62 FM 2: III 817 1139 11512 1256 12610 12625 1289 13211 etc. Consequently there are k- and a-readings in M 2.

63 Quat. λγ-λδ (fol. 257–288) were first numbered κσ-κθ (201–232).

64 βS: I 3411 14 15 655 9 12 13 676 10 13 7812 817 824 848 9 10 852 5 7 871 10712 15212 169 553 4 5612 818 926 1387 1546 1654, III 16215 18413 1859 20512 20911, also corrections or interlinear variants at I 868 1095 1129 14929 16812, II 22 91 316 4413 1364 1813 1842, III 817 354 17817 1873 2088.

68 L. Bertalot in Archivium Romanicum 15 (1931), 297; 303 f. Gesamtkatalog der Wiegen

69 L. Bertalot in Archivium Romanicum 15 (1931), 297; 303 f. Gesamtkatalog der Wiegen-

drucke, 6750, 6751. I have microfilm of part of Vatic. lat. 5137 fol. 70r–90r and the whole of Phillipps 922 and 2621, now at Yale University, Marston ms. 10 — An anonymous translation of Aeschines II in Ambros. D. 465 inf. may have been made from the printed text; see P. O. Kristeller, Iter italicum, I (1963), 288b.
The translations occur in many mss. and were printed in 1485, 1488, etc. Apparently Bruni translated from codex S; he agrees with f in the main but departs from f along with S at III 216 ( dicet) 1274, 178, 17 ( vilescit) 205, 12 228, 1 ( faculatam) 258, 7 ( arithmum). He did not use B (III 171, 10 211, 10).

(B) Vatic. Barber. gr. 159 ( olim 139): mbr. 132 leaves 250 × 170 mm. (numbered 1–133 without 111) in quaternions, written regularly with 29 lines a page. Aeschines as in S, but without scholia or other marginalia and without correction or collation—a very clean ms. There are major omissions at I 39, 12 46, 7, III 171, 10 211, 10 (one line in S), and several errors due to lack of rubric initials in S (II 69, 1 76, 11 78, 1 152, 16 164, III 8, 1 61, 75 203, 1 227, 8). On fol. 71v is an incipient omission (erased) of fol. 320v–321r in S: II 180 ποιείσθηε [αναμηνηθέντες . . . (δτι ηδυνηθηι12) τούς νέους] και τοίς τελειώτηροις. — This codex is probably to be identified with one in the library of San Marco in Florence, 69 which was formed in the main by Niccolò Niccoli, who had Aeschines' orations as early as 1416. 70 It was collated by Schultz. I have microfilm.

(C) Florence, Laur. acquisto 50: 180 leaves 266 × 169 mm. Aeschines as in S but without scholia and with arg. distributed to the heads of the respective orations and δτι ηδυνηθη appended wrongly to arg. III. The codex belonged to Francesco Castiglione of Florence (d. 1484). 71 It has not been collated in the orations.

(d) Venice, Marc. gr. VIII 20 (colloc. 1351): 90 leaves (numbered 1–89 with 19 bis) in quaternions. Aeschines as in C 72 but the order altered: III I II. “Occurrunt in marginibus textus supplementa et variae lectiones lingua graeca et latina manu ut videtur Hermolai Barbari patr. Aquileiae” (Mioni). The codex belonged to Almorò Barbaro (d. 1493). 73 It was collated by Bekker, who ignored the marginalia.

Florence, Laur. 58, 6: 107 leaves in-fol. Fol. 1–32 epistles of Phalaris and 70 Ambr. Traversarii epistolae et P. Canneto in libros XXV tributae (ed. L. Mehus, Flor., 1759), VI, 6: “Aeschinem quem petisti (Fr. Barbarus) mitteret (Nicolaus) si plane sciret quam velles, utrum orationem contra Ctesiphontem et Demothenem Latinam, an magis Graecum illius orationum codicem.” However, Traversari may be referring to F instead of B.

72 Independent of B (Heyse). δτι ηδυνηθη is not mentioned, but is probably appended to arg. III as in C.

73 This codex is supposed to have belonged to Pope Leo X (d. 1521) because of papal insignia on fol. 1r, but I do not see how this ownership combines with the other history of the codex. See E. Mioni in Italia medioevale e umanistica (1958), 331, and A. Diller, ibid., 6 (1963), 259, No. 1601. There is a photograph of fol. 1r in Bibliofilia 14 (1913), 399.
Aeschines, 33–107 Aeschines II I III with respective arg., \(\delta\tau\iota \eta\delta\upsilon\nu\eta\theta\eta\) added to arg. III as in C, without vitae scholia epistles. Or. I has the long ending and the documents with readings of S. The headings with Aeschines' name are not supplied. There is some disorder "propter quaterniones praepostere compactos" (Bandini); from Marc. VIII 20 and Ambros. gr. 26 I would expect to find III I II here. — This codex was in the Medicean Library in 1491 and 1495 (see below). It has not been collated except by Schultz in I 1–16.

Milan, Ambros. A 99 sup. (gr. 26): 52 + 266 leaves 228 \(\times\) 163 mm. Fol. 1–52 Harpocration, 1–136 Minor Attic Orators, 137–216 Lysias, 217–265 (242 bis) Aeschines III I II with respective arg. (but arg. III omitted), without vitae scholia epistles, subscribed 216v by Michael Suliardus in Florence. 74 The Minor Attic Orators were brought to Florence from Athos by Janus Lascaris in 1492. 75 This ms. of Aeschines has not been collated; it is probably an apograph of Laur. 58,6.

(q) London, Wm. H. Robinson Ltd., codex Phillipps 8077: 153 leaves 292 \(\times\) 210 mm. in two parts by different hands. The first part, in ten quart., contains Aeschines II II epist. without scholia, II preceded by its arg. and followed by \(\delta\tau\iota \eta\delta\upsilon\nu\eta\theta\eta\). The second part, nine quart. plus one leaf numbered separately, contains Aeschines I preceded by Liban. 18 (19) and with scholia including unique scholia of \(\Upsilon\), then (fol. 106v ff.) the Golden Verses and Hierocles, all copied from \(\Upsilon\). The first part also has interlinear readings from \(\Upsilon\). 76 This codex belonged to Richard Mead M.D. (d. 1754), Anthony Askew (sale 1785 No. 544), and Sir Thomas Phillipps (d. 1872). It is still held by Robinson, successor to Phillipps, from whom Köhler (see on \(\Upsilon\)) obtained microfilm of Hierocles. Taylor's description, collation, and copy of scholia, were furnished to Reiske by Askew. 77

(P) Vatic. Palat. gr. 134: 305 leaves 215 \(\times\) 155 mm., composed of several parts written by different hands. Fol. 59–126 in seven quart. and one sext. (\(\alpha\-\eta\), later \(\zeta\-\delta\)) Aeschines II III without scholia, II preceded by its arg. and followed by \(\delta\tau\iota \eta\delta\upsilon\nu\eta\theta\eta\), written regularly with 24 lines a page. The epistles are lacking. \(P\) agrees in numerous errors and in major omissions at II 84 171 279 416 44 14 853 9110 1016 (one line in S) 12317, III 44 52 2016 349 4413 452 651. They are mutually independent 78 and derive 74 E. Lobel, The Greek mss. of Aristotle's Poetics (1933), 54–56.

76 \(T\iota':\) II 174 2714 674 685 7112 14213, III 811 905 1704 2056.
77 Taylor's description is quoted by Drerup, p. 14; compare Köhler (see on \(\Upsilon\)), 74 f.
78 At III 578 \(P\) omits κα\(\iota\) το\(\iota\)ς φιλ... χρησμένους and at 5710 \(q\) is said to omit το\(\iota\)ν δε... γεγενημένον. However, in the light of \(P\) I often doubt the reported readings of \(q\); there is a contradiction at III 141 2 3.
from an apograph of S. — This codex was in the library of Ulrich Fugger of Augsburg in 1555, which he took to Heidelberg in 1567.

(E) Editio princeps by Aldus Manutius, Venice 1513, in Orationes horum rhetorum: Aeschinis, Lysiae, etc. in three vols. Aeschinis vol. I pp. 3–85: vitae arg. I II III without scholia, but schol. III ab after arg. II (p. 5) and δι τι ηδυνήθη after II (p. 52). Or. I has the seven documents of β and the long ending of f. The text is a conflation of S⁸¹ and m.² Most of the omissions of fS are supplied (so the document in I 50), but not at I 26, 107a 1785, II 113a 1411, III 76, 1203. At III 167a 5 θεταλοὶ ψφωτάναι is omitted as in amg V, not ἀφιωτάναι: οὐ γὰρ ἂν κἀκεῖνην as in fS, and at 1679 ἀποστῆσαι agrees with amgxL against ἀποστῆσαι V and ἀποστῆσαι fSk; at 1722 ἔξις γίνονται αὐτῷ agrees with amg against fS, k, V, xL, all different.

(k) Paris. gr. 2998: s. XIII 389 leaves 258 × 175 mm.³ Fol. 1–205 Demosthenes and Aeschines. Fol. 83r–117r (without 102–103, which belong at the head of the codex) Aeschines III II (sic) without arg. and with very few scholia. Or. II begins 101v and has a unique second title in the lower margin: ἀσχίνον ἀπολογία: There are singular major omissions at III 24, 14 315 5512 959 1503 1104 1172 1750 2467 19, II 225 2311 416 718 7913 1334 14715, incipient omissions at III 2514 (ἡρχον . . . ἀρχῆν), 455 (ἡ ἀτιμον ἐλναι . . . μυθένος), and an incipient repetition at III 2592 (ἐπιδημφασαντα . . . τὸ ἐκ μηδεν χρωτον), all three uncancelled. There are fenestrae towards the end: II 1218 12415 1255 9, 12 1342 13 1381 16 etc. The text has many singular readings; they are more frequent in III than in II; sometimes they are right. — This codex belonged to Fédéric Morel jr.

81 SE: I 212 4 8 10 1108 16915.

82 mE: I 5018 15414 1884, II 159 211 252 564 708 1093 1386 1771, III 7619.

83 R. Forster in Hermes 9 (1875), 24–28; idem, ed., Libanii opera, VI (1911), 112–114; VIII (1915), 597.
Illinois Classical Studies, IV

(d. 1630) and to Etienne Baluze (d. 1718). It was collated by Bekker, Heyse, and Martin-Budé. I have microfilm.

(δ) The lost parent of the closely akin but mutually independent mss. Dleon had Aeschines III II from k followed by I with arg. but without scholia from β. There were major omissions at III 432 1404 1869, II 4613 6017 (one line in k), I 9612. The fenestrae of k in II 121–156 and the omission at II 12413 were supplied from another ms. There were a few readings of i in the text: II 436 om. ἐπὶ-, 8217 ἀπειρηκότων, 8412 ἀκοῦόντος, 1154 ἀμφικτυόνων, 1174 χορηγήσαντας, 1494 τρίτου τουτί, 1585 ἐάσατε. Most of the readings of i in I cited by Heyse occur in D also.

(D) Milan, Ambros. G 69 sup. (gr. 409): 345 leaves 297 × 215 mm. Three preliminary leaves have (1rv) a pinax for the whole codex, (2r)vita 1, (2v–3r) vita 2, (3v) arg. II and scholia III ab, with text akin to LW. Fol. 4–67 are eight quat. (α-η): 4r–28v Aeschines III with k-scholia, 29r–46r II with β-scholia added 29v only, 46v–65v I with arg. but without scholia, 65v Hermogenes περὶ ἰδεῶν I 11,6 (Walz III 384 f.), 66r–67v Aristides orat. funebr. D has peculiar major omissions in III 37 ὀντ’ ἀκύρως ... τὴν πολιτείαν, 76 ἐμπιθώσατο ... εἰς θῆβας (suppl. in marg.), 140 καὶ οἱ ἰππεῖς, 173 τίς ἐστιν ... καταγελάστως, 202 ἐπὶ τοὺς νόμους καλεῖς, II 81 δ μὲν εἶδον. The scribe often corrects himself, mostly in III; usually the first writing agrees with le, the second with β. — This codex belonged to Joannes Doceianus of Constantinople (d. after 1474), but was probably not written by him, as has been supposed. It has not been collated. I have microfilm.

(l) Paris. gr. 3002: 112 leaves in small 4°. Fol. 1–87r Aeschines III II without vitae arg. or scholia (except arg. I, 60v); fol. 87v–112v various epistles including Aeschines'. I is closely akin to D but independent, not sharing omissions and other aberrant readings of D. It agrees with \( D^a \) against \( D^b \). It has omissions of its own at III 159; 168, 175, 222, 275, 54, 66, 10 173, 192, and in general is less accurate than \( D \).— This codex belonged to Gaspare Zacchi of Volterra before he became bishop of Osimo in 1468\(^8\) (it is older than Heyse thought) and later to Cardinal Domenico Grimani of Venice (d. 1523).\(^8\) It was collated by Bekker and (in I) by Heyse.

84 Montfaucon, Bibli. bibl. (1739), 1304aC–E, No. 9.
85 Corrections in D: III 179 εἰς Dkl ev D βf3, 2212 ἐν τῇ πόλει Dkle νόμων Dβf3, 2312 λόγων Dkle νόμων D etc., 4612 πολίτης Dkle πόλες D etc., 482 ύπο Dkle del. D, 524 αὐτῶν Dkle αὐτῶ D βf3, 6711 φίλους Dkle δύμος D βf3, 726 μελετήματα Dkle μελ(λ)ήματα D etc., 934 ἐμελεῖ Dkle ἡμελεῖ D etc., 957 φίλους Dkle φίλους D etc., 1261 λαβῶν D etc. -βαλῶν Dεγ, 1293 προεῖτον Dkle προεῖτον Dkle -μικᾶσι D etc., 2350 ἔξω D etc. ἔξω D etc. Dkle etc. ἔξω D etc., II 2712 φίλο- Dkle D etc., 515 6 om. Dkl καὶ D βf3, 951 νόμου Dkle δήμου D βf3, 1623 ἔκληθηνεν Dkle ἔκληθην μὲν D etc., I 340 ἀπελαύνειν D etc., 1522 θεί Dkle θέτει D etc. — There are also some old readings in D against kl or l: I 111 ἀπα. Dβf διαφυ. kle, 22310 κατακεκάεσας Dβ κατακεκάεσας fkle, 2302 ἄπο- Dβf ἀνα- kl, 24417 διαχειρίσθη τα Dβ διαχειρίσθη kl, II 589 ἄθηνα Dβ διαχειρίσθη kle, 6014 τὸν νόμον Dβf3 τοὺς νόμους k, I 4712 ἔξωργασθα Dβf3 ἔξωργασθα fskl, 1505 παντολέντα D etc. παντολέντα fskl, 1574 ραβμονίου Dkle ραβμονίου fskl.

(e) Venice, Marc. gr. VIII 4 (colloc. 1208): mbr. 1 + 209 leaves 250 × 163 mm. in 21 quint. Fol. 1–144\(r\) Demosthenes 1–9 and 18–19, 144\(r–209\(v\) Aeschines II III without arg. but with \( \beta \)-scholia clear to the end as in \( S \). At III 64\(g\) (fol. 18or?) "hinc altera manus". The text of the orations is from \( \delta \), but I omitted as in \( P \) and II III in the order of \( \beta \). There are major omissions at II 85, 143\(g\), III 24, 15 (in marg. \( kD \) 198).— This codex was in the library of the convent of Sts. John and Paul in Venice, which was transferred to the Marcian Library in 1789. The text was collated by Bekker; the scholia were found by Schultz after his edition.\(^8\)

(s) London, Harley 6322: 304 leaves 28.5 × 21.7 cm. in four parts, all but the first by Michael Lygizus, the same scribe as in \( Y \): (a) fol. 1–74 Demosthenes 1–11; (b) 75–184 Dem. 18, Aeschines II, Dem. 19, 60; (c) 185–266 Synesius; (d) 267–304 PsArist. \( \textit{rhet. ad Alex.} \)\(^9\) Aeschines II is from \( k \) (not \( \delta \)).— This codex, formerly in Ripon (Yorkshire), was acquired by Harley in 1725.\(^9\) It was collated by Taylor and for Blass and inspected by Drerup for Heyse, who showed that it is an apograph of \( k \).

(i) Paris. gr. 2996: s. XIV 477 leaves 205 × 157 mm. Fol. 1–49 Demosthenes 19 abrupt at the beginning, 50–83 Aeschines II without arg. but with \( \beta \)-scholia, 84–418 Aristides followed (415v–418v) by an excerpt

---

\(^{89}\) \textit{Neue Jahrbücher} 97 (1868), 749–752.

\(^{91}\) \( \textit{ks}: I 114 \mu\textit{μευνύσθε} k\textit{τ}ς \textit{μαθησθε} \textit{β}f\textit{κm}\textit{s}\textit{m} 122 \textit{οιμού} \textit{ks} \textit{ομ}. \delta 211 \textit{ημεν} \textit{β}f\textit{κ} \textit{οιμού} \textit{s} (?) \textit{δη} \textit{κμ} 344 \textit{δυνάμεως} \textit{ομ}. \textit{k}\textit{σι} \textit{suppl.} \textit{k}\textit{m}\textit{m} \textit{hav}. \textit{β}f\textit{β} 443 \textit{τάυτη}- \textit{β}f\textit{κ} \textit{καιτι} \delta 6110 \textit{επιδημίου} \textit{β}f\textit{κf}\textit{τ}ς \textit{ἐπιτύμησα} \textit{k}\textit{δ}\textit{δ} 164\textit{d} \textit{ἐπεκάλου} \textit{k}\textit{δ}s \textit{παρεκάλου} \textit{β}f\textit{κm}\textit{D}.

\(^{92}\) C. E. Wright, ed., \textit{The diary of Humphrey Wanley} (1966), 348, 415.
from Menander (Walz IX 287), 419-477 Aristides pro quattuor viris pars quinta. Fol. 54-83 are three quat. and a binion signed ς-ς (74-75 are extra, see below); fol. 1-53 lacking two leaves at the beginning and one between 6 and 7 must be ε-ω, Dem. 19 beginning with ε, α-δ lost. The ms. is uncritical but literate—the work of a learned scribe. There are slight changes of script at 55r and 60v. In the upper margin 50r are two titles: κατὰ τιμάρχου (sic) and περὶ παραπροσβείας. In the right and lower margins 50r is the scholion ὅτι ἐδώνηθη (sic) . . . ἀφανὸς found elsewhere only in f (and its offspring) following the end of II. The text is peculiar and problematical (see above). A bit of scholia (VXL) is in the text at II 391. Major omissions are supplied by the first hand. One very large omission must have occurred in the Vorlage: fol. 73v om. II 134 πρέσβεις [δεδεκότας . . . 141 ξιθρας] φανερῆς; this is supplied on two inserted leaves (74-75) still by the first hand; the readings show that the source was V, and there are a few V-readings elsewhere in the text.\footnote{93} — This codex was one of a number of Greek codices purchased by Francis I from Antonius Eparchus of Venice in 1538.\footnote{94} It was one source of the scholia Bernardi (Scaligeri) (Schultz pp. 249 f.). It was collated by Bekker, Dübner (for Dindorf), Heyse, and others. I have microfilm.

(F) Florence, Laur. 60,4: 77 leaves in large 4°. Aeschines III II without arg. or scholia followed by epistles of Aeschines (60r) and others (68r). The absence of I, the order III II, and the lack of arg. and scholia, suggest k, but the text is a mixture of k\footnote{95} and a\footnote{96} in III. Or. II has the unique title of k αἰσχίνων ἀπολογία and seems to be pure k in II 1-12, but from there on pure a. The epistles are akin to SB (Drerup). — This codex belonged to Niccolò Niccoli of Florence (d. 1437), possibly as early as 1416 (see on codex B). It was collated by Schultz.

(z) Mosquensis gr. 475 (olim CCLIV, 267): 142 leaves 29 × 21 cm. Demosthenes 19, Aeschines II III, Dem. 18 21 20. Codex Dresden Da 11 (58 leaves: Dem. 1-17) was probably once part of this codex;\footnote{97} it is by

\footnote{93}{Vi: II 2310 526 675 16 18 948 979 989 10214 1132 1174 1266 10 1353 7 1365 7 13712 1410 (ἀργομενίων). Fol. 74-75 have scholia also from V.}

\footnote{94}{H. Omont, "Cat. des mss. grecs d’Antoine Éparche (1538)", Bibl. de l’école des chartes 53 (1892), 103, No. 45; idem, Cat. des mss. grecs de Fontainebleau (1889), 53, No. 146.}

\footnote{95}{kFz: III 74 10 425 481 8 555 12 17 567 9 5710 14 705 791 8112 822 844 8617 872 5 923 948, etc.}

\footnote{96}{aFz: III 37 133 178 236 291 302 361 397 405 472 544 733 886, etc., but mFz: III 85 4616 1139 12615, also II 607 1771.}

\footnote{97}{O. Gebhardt in Centralbl. für Bibliothekswesen 15 (1898), 538 f. The Dresden codices formerly in Moscow have been returned to Moscow.}
the same hand (except fol. 40–58).\(^9^8\) Codex z agrees with \(F\)\(^9^9\) in spite of the order II III. It has the unique title of II in \(kF\) (Vladimir). — This codex belonged to Giambattista Rasario (d. 1578) and Maximus Margunius (d. 1602), both of Venice.\(^1^0^0\) It was collated by C. Hoffmann for his edition of Aeschines III (Moscow, 1845).

\(W\) Vatic. gr. 67: 295 × 210 mm. Fol. 1–83r Demosthenes, 83v–142 Aeschines (142 originally blank, 1–142 are 17 quart. and one ternion), 143–256 Aristides (256abc blank), 257–276 epistles of Brutus and Phalaris. Fol. 83v–84v vitae and arg. III I, 85r–102v I, 102v schol. III ab, 103r–121v III, 121v arg. II, 122r–136v II, 136v–141v epistles. The orations have scholia in red in margins and between lines. Drerup found heavy contamination in the epistles, and the same is true of the orations. The text of I is basically \(V\), but contaminated with \(f\).\(^1^0^1\) It has the short ending of \(\beta V\). Some readings of \(f\) occur as doubles with or without \(\gamma p\). I 67 is repeated entire after I 68, agreeing here with \(f\). However, in the vitae arg. documents and scholia, all lacking in \(f\), there was another source from which defects of \(V\) were made good; this source seems to have been like \(L\).\(^1^0^2\) The text of III is still \(V\), but contaminated with \(k\) in III 1–20. Scholia cease at III 156 as in \(V\). There is a large lacuna fol. I 11r: III 81 μετὰ τοῦτο [ἐβουλεύτο \(\ldots\) 129 ἡγεμονίαν] τῆς ἐυσεβείας; this must represent a quaternion missing in the Vorlage, which was not \(V\) itself. The text of II is basically \(i\), manifest by many unique readings of \(i\) and by \( δτι ἐδυνάμηθη\) at the head (122r) as only in \(i\); but it is contaminated somewhat with \(\beta\) and \(f\).\(^1^0^3\)

— This codex probably belonged with \(V\) to Cardinal Isidorus Ruthenus: there are large additions in his hand fol. 83r and 142.\(^1^0^4\) It has not been examined for Aeschines before; I have microfilm.

\(V\) Urbinas graecus deperditus. The Indice Vecchio of Urbino (ca. 1485–1500)\(^1^0^5\) has Aeschines' orations twice: Greco 82 is certainly the

---

\(^9^8\) B. Fonkij by letter 16 December 1969, who says the hand is the one I wish to identify as Andronicus Callistus, see Italia medioevale e umanistica 10 (1967), 406–408.

\(^9^9\) N.b. III 5512 om. \(k\)\(^1\) suppl. \(z^2\).

\(^1^0^0\) A. Turyn, The Manuscript Tradition of the Tragedies of Aeschylus (1943), 57 n. 59; K. A. de Meyier in Scriptorium 9 (1955), 102 n. 17.

\(^1^0^1\) \(V\) W: I 59r 13 24 52r 12 83l 141r, etc. \(f\) W: I 911 i 107 111 12 136 i 1713 2210 344 417 489, etc.

\(^1^0^2\) Not \(V\): vita 13, doc. I 1610 663; \(W\) L: vita 214 15 64, arg. I a 9 17 26 1 9 11, arg. III 40 42 46, doc I 5312 683.

\(^1^0^3\) \(V\) \(\beta\) W: II 34 1113 125 2313 356 5811 736, etc. \(f\) W: II 22 75 89 128 187 2310 333 434 504 525 546, etc.

\(^1^0^4\) G. Mercati in Studi e Testi 46 (1926), aggiunte, pp. 1–3.

present Urb. gr. 116 (c), Greco 164 is in a section entitled Libri Graeci in Armario (131–168); some of these libri are identical with previous items in the Indice while others have disappeared unaccountably. Greco 164 must be one of the latter as it cannot be our codex c. Now the Gotha ms. t has Aeschines III copied from c and I copied from the same Vorlage (v) as Y. I venture to guess that Greco 164 was this lost Vorlage. It was itself copied from M and l, which belonged to Bessarion and his secretary Gaspare Zacchi respectively; hence it was copied in Italy, probably by Michael Apostoles, who produced Y from it and whose script is frequent in the present codices Urbinates. It was probably a rough ms. (to judge from N), misprized in the elegant collection of Duke Federigo.

(Y) Vatic. gr. 72: 140 + 3 leaves 290 × 210 mm. in two parts by different hands, the second (fol. 81–136) by Michael Apostoles, the first by his pupil Michael Lygizus.107 Fol. iv Libanius hyp. Dem. 18 (19) in a later hand; 2–47 (five quat. and a ternion, α–γ) Aeschines I II with scholia; 48–80 (with 8oabc blank, four quat. and a binion) Aeschines III with scholia only at the beginning; 81–136 (seven quat.) Golden Verses of Pythagoras followed by Hierocles’ commentary et alia.108 The loss of the Vorlage v of Y blurs the analysis of its sources. Aeschines in Y is a hotchpotch like W. It is from f in the main: the prolegomena are lacking, I 196, has the long ending, οἱ ἡδωρήθη follows II, and the text agrees mostly with f. But it is much contaminated with β in I and with k in II III and after III 113 agrees with k only. Actually the f-source was M,109 which ends at III 113, and the k-source was l.110 But there were other sources. Among the interlinear and marginal variants I find three unique readings of a: I 111–120, 171–11, II 442–3, also I 5018; a also has variants from Y. In the quotations from Iliad in I 144–150 and from Hesiod in III 135 there are big interpolations from the text of the poets. The seven documents of I are interpolated part in the text and part in the margin. The scholia, which cannot be from ML, are in various scripts, red and black. A series near the beginning of I has the numbers (α–ζ) of L fol. 176r, where the

---

106 Stornajolo, p. CLXXV: Aeschynis orationes, quint. XI; (S)ynesii de dono ad Paeonium, quint. 7; Cyri vita [Xen. Anab.], quint. 12. Y has Aeschines’ orations in 11 quires.

107 On these two scribes see M. Wittek, Album de paléographe grecque (1967), pp. 24 f., pl. 35, 37 (Apostoles) and 36 (Lygizus), with references, also Wiesner and Victor (see on ms. i), pp. 53, 59.

109 *MY vs. f: I 2213 2912 653 7011 7812 1524 1665 1745 1775 1815, II 864.

110 *Y vs. D: I 6610, III 1186 1597 16610 1686 1755 2227 2355.
scholia are numbered by the page. Codex L came from Crete, where Apostoles and Lygizus lived. At the beginning of II the first scholia are in the script of the text and have readings of L, but the long scholia on II 10 and 12 are in a different script and agree with a. There are also many unique scholia (in Schultz from q), which do not belong to the old fund of scholia. — This codex was purchased for the Vatican from Antonius Eparchus of Venice in 1551; 111 Petrus Cacus, a former owner, is unknown. It has not been examined for Aeschines before; I have microfilm.

(h) Paris. gr. 2947: 95 leaves. Aeschines I II III with Libanius 18 (19) 112 and ἐδὶ ἀκόειον as in Y. Together with Paris. gr. 1804 (ch. 54 leaves: Golden Verses with Hierocles) 113 h makes a complete apograph of Y, all written by Michael Apostoles. Scholia are not reported from h, perhaps because they were added to Y after h was copied. There is secondary correction in III: major omissions of lY are supplied at III 1172 1404 1597 1755 2227, also I 6610. h2 agrees constantly with m and m2, q.v. — This codex belonged to Marcus Musurus (d. 1517) 114 and later (with mg) to Janus Lascaris. It was collated by Bekker and Heyse.

(c) Vatic. Urbin. gr. 116: mbr. 93 leaves 264 × 168 mm. in nine quint. plus three leaves, written regularly 28 lines a page, a clean ms. without marginalia or corrections. Aeschines I II III without scholia followed (81v) by arg. Ia, arg. III, ἐδὶ ἀκόειον, arg. II, epist., vitae. Or. I stands apart (fol. 1–24) and is from A (Heyse 1912); the rest is continuous and is from a ms. like d but contaminated from p. 115 — This codex was in the famous library of Federigo da Monte Feltro duke of Urbino (d. 1482; see on codex v). It was collated in III by Bekker. I have microfilm.

(t) Gotha, Landesbibliothek B 572: 138 leaves 221 × 158 mm. Fol. 1–3 Gorgias, 3–41 Aeschines III without scholia, 41–64 I as far as 175 ἐκπώετο with scholia, 66–100 Demosthenes, 101–135 Phalaris. Apparently 1–64 are eight quat. and were followed by other quat. now lost. Heyse (1904) showed that III was copied from c; but it has a good deal of correction by the first and later hands, of which he gives no account. Heyse also showed (1912) that I is closely akin to hq, that is, to Y, but independent of Y, which has a major omission at I 17312 not shared by t. In I Y and t have similar fusions of f and β but Y has more of β than t has. In their Vorlage (v) the readings of β may have been entered in such a way that t could

111 Studi e Testi 244 (1965) 419 f.
113 Köhler, 72–74.
115 ed: II 1911 157 164 211 12 2818 22 314 336 734, etc., ϕ II 1911 2115 262 299 7118 777 799 934 1174 1199 1345 15613, etc. See Heyse (1904), p. 15, for III.
ignore some of them. — This codex belonged to Barth. Walther of Pforta in 1590. It was collated by Franke\textsuperscript{116} and Heyse.

The following mss. have not been examined. They contain only single orations of Aeschines. None of them seems likely to be important.

Vatic. Ottobon. gr. 254: mbr. 57 leaves $234 \times 156$ mm. Fol. 1–50 Demosthenes 60 and 18, fol. 51–55 Aeschines I 1–39, the rest unfinished or lost. From Card. Gugli. Sirleto (d. 1585).\textsuperscript{117}

Vatic. gr. 1392: 170 leaves $215 \times 145$ mm.\textsuperscript{118} Fol. 108v–142v Aeschines II with arg. From Fulvio Orsini (d. 1600).

Neap. II E 28: 81 leaves $282 \times 204$ mm. Fol. 1–75 Dem. 19, 76–80 Aeschines II 1–22.\textsuperscript{119}

Salamanca 223 pars B: 19 leaves $262 \times 192$ mm. Aeschines II 1–124 (unfinished), entitled \textit{peri τῆς παραπρεπεῖεας λόγος κατὰ τίμαρχον} (sic, compare ms. i). Dem. 19 (unfinished) is in ms. 71 fol. 128–143. Both mss. belonged to Fernan Nuñez de Guzman (Pintianus, d. 1552).\textsuperscript{120}

Istanbul, \textit{Metókhion τοῦ Παναγίου Τόφου}, No. 10: ch. 4 s. XVI, \textit{Αισχύνω \textit{peri τῆς παραπρεπεῖεας λόγος}. This ms. listed only in a catalogue of 1845 has disappeared.\textsuperscript{121}

Athens, \textit{Βιβλ. τῆς βουλῆς} 23: 410 leaves $24 \times 16$ cm., s. XIX. Fol. 348-end Aeschines II.\textsuperscript{122}

Vatic. gr. 2362: 177 leaves $290 \times 213$ mm. Fol. 1–141 Demosthenes, 142–176 Aeschines III. The contents are the same as in Vatic. 1585.\textsuperscript{123} From the Jesuit Collegio Romano, suppressed 1773.\textsuperscript{124}

Vatic. gr. 1949: 217 $\times 147$ mm. Fol. 178 179 181 Aeschines III 35–50, \textsuperscript{116} \textit{Neue Jahrbücher} 34 (1842), 268–273.

\textsuperscript{117} E. Miller, \textit{Cat. des mss. grecs de la bibl. de l’Escurial} (1848, repr. 1966), 330 rhet. 30.
\textsuperscript{119} \textit{Rivista indo-greco-italica} 14 (1930), 104.
\textsuperscript{120} A. Tovar, \textit{Cat. codd. graec. universitatis Salamanctae} I (\textit{Acta Salamanticensia, Filosofia y Letras} XV, 4 [1963]), 39 f., 32 f.
\textsuperscript{121} Papadopoulos-Kerameus, \textit{'Ιεροσωλυμιτική βιβλιοθήκη} IV (1899), 437.
\textsuperscript{122} S. Lampros, \textit{Νέος Έλληνομνήμων} 1 (1904), 363.
\textsuperscript{123} L. Canfora, \textit{Inventario dei mss. greci di Demostene} (1969), 60.
\textsuperscript{124} G. Mercati in \textit{Studi e Testi} 164 (1952), 28.
fol. 18or four lines only from III 58, fol. 180v 182 183 blank. The missing bifolium with III 50-58 is in Florence, Magliabech. gr. 17.\(^{125}\)

Neapol. II E 11: 168 leaves 295 × 313 mm. Fol. 1–143 Demosthenes, 144–168 Aeschines III 1–192 (the rest lost).\(^{126}\) The contents are not the same as in Vatic. 1585 and 2362. From the royal collection of Naples.\(^{127}\)

Florence, Libri-Ashburnham 1640: 40 leaves 219 × 140 mm. Aeschines III 1–181. From Giulio Saibante of Verona 1734.\(^{128}\)

Lisbon, Bibl. Nat., unnumbered ms.: 42 leaves in 4\(^{\circ}\) (three quint. and a sext.). Aeschines III.\(^{129}\)

Athos, Vatopedi 736: 381 leaves 24 × 17 cm. s. XIX. Fol. 267–290 Aeschines III with commentary.

Vatic. Palat. gr. 51 fol. 185–224: scholia on Aeschines I II III, probably copied in Florence 1550–1560 by Arnold Arlenius, who owned the codex.\(^{130}\)

Paris. suppl. gr. 1344 fol. 1–34: scholia on Aeschines prepared for an edition by Emmanuel Miller (d. 1886). Baiter and Sauppe (II [1850] p. 11) used a copy by Miller of scholia \(\text{m}f\) on Aeschines II 1–71. W. Dindorf used collations of \(\text{f}m\) by Fr. Dübner in his edition of the scholia (1852).

Codex Mediceus deperditus. In the catalogue of the \(\text{Graeca Bibliotheca}\) of the \(\text{Mediceae domus insignis bibliotheca, quae nunc est apud R(everendissim)um Car(dina)lem de Medicis}, by Fabio Vigili in Rome ca. 1510,\(^{131}\) codex No. 17 is as follows:

Aeschinis rhetoris orationes tres vz contra Timarchum una, \(\text{pepl} \text{\piαραπρεας-} \betaειas \text{i(d est) de corrupta sive falsa legatione 2}\(^a\), Contra Ctesiphonem de coronatione tertia.

Bruti epistolae ad varios.

Propositiones quaedam Geometricae Euclidis ut videtur.

M. Tullij Ciceronis Cato, sive de Senectute liber, a Theodoro in graecum sermonem conversus.

\(^{125}\) \textit{Studi italiani} 2 (1894), 553.

\(^{127}\) Fabricius-Harles, \textit{Bibl. graeca}, V (1796), 783, No. 199.

\(^{130}\) G. Mercati in \textit{Studi e Testi} 79 (1927, 1937), 358–371, esp. 366.

Epistola Nicolai quinti Pontificis ad Constantium Palaeologum Constanti-nopolitanum imperatorem, a Theodoro in graecum sermonem conversa.
Ciceronis epistola prima ad Lentulum vz ego omni officio, ab eodem Theodoro ut puto in graecum conversa.
Dionysij Halicarnasei De fabula et historia ac philosophia quaedam et per consequens de poetis historicis et philosophis quibusdam ut de Homero
Hesiodo Antimacho heroicis, Panyasi Pindaro Simonide Stesichoro
Alcaeo lyricis, Aeschylo Sophocle Eurypide tragicis, Menandro comico, Herodoto Thucydide Philisto Xenophonthe Theopompo historicis, Pythagoricis Xenophonthe Platone Aristotele philosophis, Lysia Isocrate Lycurgo Demosthene Aeschine Hyperide oratoribus, deque corum intentione et stilo.
Quaedam ad astrologica et logica pertinentia.
Isaac Argyri libellus de lingua.

Although the Medicean library is preserved as a whole in the Laurentian Library in Florence, this codex has disappeared, unfortunately, as it was interesting in several respects. In the register of loans for the Medicean library 132 Aeschines’ orations occur three times:

13. 1481/2 Nov. 21 to Politian: l’orationi d’Eschine e altre cose di Theodoro, rosso, in papiro.
62. 1489 Jan. 13 to Chalcondyles: librum Aeschinis in quo sunt tres ejus orationes.
76. 1491 Oct. 3 to Augusto Padoano: le orationi de Eschine, in un volume nel qual sono anco le sue epistole.

No. 13 is certainly our lost codex, 62 is probably the same, 76 must be Laur. 58, 6. In the inventory of 1495 133 there are three mss. of Aeschines’
orationes:

320. Epistle Phalaridis et Eschinis cum orationibus, in papiro contente in quadam chartula.
329. Lysias et Herodianus, in papiro.
388. Eschines in Thimarcum et alia quedam, in papiro.

No. 320 is Laur. 58, 6; 329 is Laur. 57, 45, which came to the library only in 1492, and 388 must be our lost codex. In Vigili’s catalogue I find only two: 17 and 54 (Laur. 57, 45). Why Laur. 58, 6 is absent I cannot say.

To return to our lost codex, the orations of Aeschines were complete and in the traditional order, but apparently without the prolegomena and epistles. These meagre data, which are shared by some other mss. (MThg), do not afford a clue to the classification of the ms. It was probably not 132 Published by E. Piccolomini in Archivio storico italiano, serie terza, 21 (1875), 285, 287, 288.

133 Published by E. Piccolomini, ibid., 20 (1874), 51–94.
early enough to be very important. Theodore Gaza (see below) cites Aeschines’ orations in his opusculum \textit{peri mou\v{r}e\v{n}on}.\textsuperscript{134}

The last item in the codex is problematical; no work of Argyrus \textit{de lingua} is known.\textsuperscript{135} The translation of Cicero \textit{de senectute} occurs in several mss.,\textsuperscript{136} some of which attribute it to Theodore Gaza, as here. A mistaken attribution to Maximus Planudes has gained some currency.\textsuperscript{137} The translation of the epistle of Nicholas V to Constantine Palaeologus occurs in many mss. The epistle is dated 11 October 1451,\textsuperscript{138} a \textit{post quem} for at least this part of our codex. The translation of Cicero \textit{ad fam. I} is new, so far as I know. Perhaps it was an inchoate work. If so, our codex would be near to Theodore Gaza, perhaps autograph. Gaza (d. 1476) bequeathed most of his books to Demetrius Chalcondyles, then professor in Florence.\textsuperscript{139} Perhaps this is the way our codex came to the Medicean library.

The work of Dionysius Halic. was the excerpt called \textit{\'a\rho\chi\v{e}i\v{o}n k\'r\i\v{s}is} or \textit{veternum censura}, now regarded as a fragment of \textit{peri mou\v{r}e\v{n}es\v{e}w}on.\textsuperscript{140} It occurs without heading and quite anonymous at the end of the famous codex Paris. gr. 1741\textsuperscript{141} (fol. 299–301) and in a few apographs of that ms.\textsuperscript{142} It was first edited by H. Stephanus in 1554, who attributed it \textit{de suo} to Dion. Halic. because it seemed to be part of a work of his that preceded it in Stephanus’ ms. This attribution, though conjectural, seems to be valid. Now we have it much earlier, apparently from Theodore Gaza. Probably Gaza had the text from Paris. gr. 1741 itself, as the apographs are mostly later and there is other evidence of his having that codex.

Francesco Filelfo says \textit{Aeschinis orationes et epistolae} were among the Greek \textsuperscript{134} Migne, \textit{Patrologia graeca} 19, pp. 1167–1218 (1173C, 1176C).

\textsuperscript{135} On Isaac Argyrus see G. Mercati in \textit{Studi e Testi} 36 (1931), passim.

\textsuperscript{136} Laur. 58, 33; Vatic. gr. 1405; Paris. gr. 2071; Monac. gr. 289; Bodl. Barocci 165; Elbing O 2; Scorial. depend. 733 (Miller p. 380) = 636 Andres; ed. Froben 1520.

\textsuperscript{137} J. Irmscher, “Cicero and Byzantium”, \textit{Byzantinoslavica} 20 (1959), 28–39, esp. 37 f.

\textsuperscript{138} E. Legrand, \textit{Bibliogr. hellén. des XV\textsuperscript{e} et XVI\textsuperscript{e} siècles}, I (1885, repr. 1962), p. XXXIV n. 1.

\textsuperscript{142} Cohn discusses the ms. without knowing of our lost codex. The Cambridge ms., which was Stephanus’ copy, is probably the remains of a codex listed in the \textit{Index D. Card. Grimani} (see on ms. l) No. 6: ... Demetrius Phalereus de interpretatione. Dionysius de compositione nominum. Idem de peccatis quae fiunt in declamationibus. Maximus de insolubilibus oppositionibus....
codices he brought from Constantinople in 1427. This is not enough to identify the codex, if it still exists. It might be ms. m. Filelfo lectured on Aeschines in Florence in 1431/2.\textsuperscript{143}

Melanchthon says Johannes Reuchlin (d. 1522) had a ms. of Aeschines' and Demosthenes' opposing speeches,\textsuperscript{144} which he bought from Jacob Questenberg in Rome, written by Questenberg himself in a handsome script. Other sources mention Aeschines only, without Demosthenes.\textsuperscript{145} Reuchlin edited the crown speeches of Aeschines and Demosthenes together in 1522, but took his text of Aeschines from the \textit{editio princeps} of 1513, to judge from the reprint of Paris, 1543, which I have examined.

\textit{Indiana University}

\textsuperscript{143} A. Calderini, "Ricerche intorno alla biblioteca e alla cultura greca di Francesco Filelfo", \textit{Studi italiani} 20 (1913), 217, 245 f.
\textsuperscript{144} Compare Paris, gr. 3004 (n) and Barber, gr. 53.
\textsuperscript{145} K. Christ, \textit{Die Bibliothek Reuchlins in Pforzheim} (\textit{Zentralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, Beiheft} 52, 1924), pp. 9, 30, 51; K. Preisendanz, "Die Bibliothek Johannes Reuchlins", \textit{Festgabe Johannes Reuchlin} (1955), 64, 80; see Questenberg, quoted by G. Mercati in \textit{Studi e Testi} 79 (1937), 444 f.
Perfect Friendship in Aristotle’s Nicomachean Ethics

THEODORE TRACY, S.J.

We tend to think of Aristotle as the embodiment of cold, objective, and unimpassioned reason, critical, aloof and independent, self-possessed and self-sufficient, proposing contemplation of the pure intelligibles as the ultimate human happiness. It is perhaps surprising, then, to realize that two of the ten books of the Nicomachean Ethics, as they come to us, are devoted to philia, most frequently, and inadequately, translated by words full of human warmth, “love” or “friendship.” Aristotel sees philia, taken in the broadest sense of “mutual attraction and attachment,” as that which ties together, along with justice, every form of natural and conventional relationship among human beings. “For in every association we find mutual rights of some sort as well as philia” (1159 b 26 f.).

Depending upon the nature of the persons involved and the basis of their relationship, philia is distinguished by Aristotle into many different kinds. “Aretē-philia” draws together equals mutually attracted by each other’s goodness; “pleasure-philia” unites pleasure seekers; “profit-philia”, those who find association advantageous; “erotic philia” attracts the sensual lover (erastēs) to the beloved; “marriage-philia” joins husband and wife; “filial philia” and “parental philia” bind children to parents and parents to children; “family-philia” unites brothers, sisters, and other close relations; “companion-philia” holds together fellow workers, shipmates, soldiers in a company; “civic philia” binds together fellow citizens, the

---

1 As the commentators point out, there is no single word in modern languages that can be applied to the wide spectrum of relationships covered by the Greek philia. The English “love” is too strong for the relationship between business partners or fellow workers; while “friendship” is too weak for the relationship between husband and wife, or mother and child.

2 All citations by Bekker number alone are from the Nicomachean Ethics.
ruler and the ruled; “hospitality-philia” links foreign guest-friends. For Aristotle, human beings are by nature interdependent, which implies a natural need for love or friendship. Man, he says, is first a “pairing animal” (zoon syndyastikon) and then a “political animal” (zoon politikon), a member of a polis with all its subsidiary associations (1162a16—19). To live apart from others, without love or friendship, an individual would have to be a god, or something less than human (Politics 1253a29).

In Books VIII and IX of the Nicomachean Ethics Aristotle distinguishes the various forms of philia we have mentioned, grouping them into two large divisions, philia between equals and philia between unequals (1158b1—14). In the first group he distinguishes equals who are mutually attracted and attached by different motives—intrinsic goodness, pleasure, or usefulness (profit, advantage)—realizing of course that some relationships may be built upon more than one motive, others largely upon one of them alone. The second group, philia between unequals, includes such relationships as those between parents and children, the old and the young, husband and wife, ruler and ruled.

All of these types have some general characteristics implied by the term philia: (1) The basis of philia is good-will (eunoia), i.e., wishing the good of another, at least in some respect; (2) this feeling of good-will must be mutual, not one-sided; and (3) both parties must be aware of the other’s good-will (1155b27—1156a5). (4) Moreover, the mutual good-will must be more than mere well-wishing: an operative disposition or readiness to expend effort in actively assisting the other (1167a7—10). Persons involved in philia (5) normally associate regularly (suzên, synhêmereuein) and (6) derive some pleasure from this association (1158a1—10). Finally, (7) philia requires the possibility of some proportionate exchange, even between persons of unequal nature or status (1159b1—3; 1163a24 f.).

3 It is true that for Aristotle one characteristic of human happiness is that the activity which constitutes its essence be, as far as possible, independent and self-sufficient (autarkês). But even this is qualified by man’s social nature. In the first book of the Nicomachean Ethics, while postulating that happiness, the ultimate human good, must be self-sufficient, Aristotle warns: “We speak of self-sufficiency not as involving only oneself alone, living a life in solitude, but also parents, children, wife, and, in general, philoi and fellow-citizens, since man is by nature a social animal” (zoon politikon: 1097b8—11). This passage challenges the view of commentators who tend (1) to exaggerate the self-sufficiency of Aristotle’s supremely happy man (e.g., A. W. H. Adkins, “Friendship and ‘Self-Sufficiency’ in Homer and Aristotle,” CQ N.S. 13, 1963, 44 f.) or (2) to minimize the connection between the books on philia and the rest of the Nicomachean Ethics (e.g., W. D. Ross, in his introduction to The World’s Classics edition of the Nicomachean Ethics, London, 1954, xx f.). The importance of philia to the activity of contemplation (theoria) will be indicated later.
Granted that the various types of philia share all, or most, of these common characteristics in greater or lesser degree, still for Aristotle not all are philia in the same sense. How then are they related? In the Nicomachean Ethics Aristotle conceives the various philia-relationships as analogous: All may be called philia, but by analogy with, and resemblance to, one perfect realtionship, which is philia par excellence (pròtòs kai kyriòs: 1157 a 29–32) and which alone properly deserves the name.⁴ In this discussion I shall concentrate upon the nature and characteristics of that prime analogue or archetype, perfect philia, as Aristotle presents it in the Nicomachean Ethics.

The responses and activities of philia, like all human emotion and action in Aristotle, must be evoked by some telos, some principle of attraction and fulfillment, some good perceived in or connected with the person who is the object of philia. Aristotle reduces all possible motives to the three we have mentioned: (1) The intrinsic goodness or excellence (aretè) of that person; (2) the person's ability to give pleasure; (3) the usefulness of that person to the other (1155 b 17 ff.). The three are not mutually exclusive, of course. And the last, usefulness, will in fact always be found subordinate to the others, since a person will be useful to another in so far as he helps the other achieve either goodness or pleasure, or both (1155 b 19–21). Of these three motives, Aristotle believes that only the mutual possession and recognition of aretè, intrinsic excellence, moral and intellectual, can provide the basis for perfect or complete philia (teleia philia). "The perfect form of philia is that between good persons, i.e. those who are like each other in intrinsic excellence" (kat' aretèn: 1156 b 7 f.).

For Aristotle, a person achieves intrinsic excellence, the aretè which makes him a good human being, when he is habitually oriented, in moral character (éthos), emotion, and action response, toward what is good or noble (to kalon); and rejoices in the exercise of his noblest faculties, those of the intellect (nous), according to their proper virtues, particularly the activity of the virtue of wisdom in reflective study and contemplation of the noblest realities of the universe (théòria). Such a person is good, an excellent human being in the complete sense, possessing the moral and intellectual virtues described by Aristotle in the first six books of the Nicomachean Ethics.⁵

⁵ It seems clear from Book IX (1169 b 3–1170 b 19) that intellectual virtues and activities hold the same priority for Aristotle in his discussion of philia as in the rest of the Nicomachean Ethics, so that the paradigm, perfect or complete philia at its fullest and best, is assumed to be that which exists between persons of completely developed moral
When two such fully-developed human beings first come to know each other, both being habitually responsive to what is good or noble (to kalon), their first response may be what Aristotle calls eunoia, “good-will,” which is the beginning of philia (1167 a 7 ff.; 1155 b 31—1156 a 5). True good-will must (1) be elicited by awareness of what is excellent in the other person (1167 a 19 f.), and (2) must wish the other well for his own sake (1155 b 31–33). “For one who wants another to do well because he hopes to gain advantage through that other, seems to have good-will not for the other but rather for himself; just as no one is a friend who cultivates another because he may be useful” (dia tina chrēsin: 1167 a 15–18). Friendships based on profit and pleasure do not arise from true good-will (1167 a 13 f.).

If perfect philia is to develop, both good men must feel true good-will toward one another, and both must become aware of their mutual regard (1155 b 31—1156 a 5). But this is not enough. To mature into philia, the relationship must grow beyond mutual recognition of each other’s excellence and mutually disinterested good-will, to the point where each (1) recognizes the other’s goodness, not just objectively (haplōs) but as relevant to himself (pros hauton), and (2) not only wishes the other well but wants to implement that by actively doing good to the other for the other’s sake, i.e., by conferring such benefits upon the other which will preserve or increase the other’s intrinsic goodness.

This transition from passive good-will to an active desire to benefit the other comes through closer association and growing familiarity between the two good men (1167 a 10–12), accompanied by an intensification of what Aristotle calls philēsis, “friendly feeling”, the emotional attachment of philia which involves active desire (orexis: 1166 b 32–34). For both and intellectual aretē. This is not to deny that the type of philia based on aretē can exist also between persons whose aretai, moral and intellectual, are imperfect or only partly developed. Aristotle asserts, for example, that aretē-philia can exist between a man and woman (husband and wife) of good character (1162 a 25–27), though he believes that their natural functions (erga) are quite different (1162 a 22 f.); and we know from elsewhere that he considers the female-at-best to be incapable of achieving the same standard of aretē as the male-at-best, being both physically and intellectually inferior to him. See Politics 1260 a 5–24; De generatione animalium 728 a 18–22; 737 a 28; 766 a 17–23; 775 a 13–22; Tracy, Physiological Theory and the Doctrine of the Mean in Plato and Aristotle (Chicago, 1969), 318 f., 321 f., 328 f.; and note 10, below. Hence it would not be true to say that, for Aristotle, only philosophers can be philetai kat' aretēn, though I assume he would maintain that only philosophers enjoy human philia at its most perfect and best, just as they enjoy human happiness at its most perfect and best. I am grateful to Richard Kraut for pointing out this problem.

perfect philia and philia of any sort, this "friendly feeling" must of course be mutual (antiphilēsis: 1155 b 27 f.).

However, intense mutual friendly sentiment between good men is apparently not enough for Aristotle. He believes perfect philia must go deeper than feeling. In perfect philia the two must also be intellectually aware of each other's intrinsic goodness and accept each other as philoi by deliberate choice. "Friendly feeling (philēsis) seems to arise from emotion, but philia from a fixed disposition . . . Mutual philia is accompanied by deliberate choice (proairesis), and choice depends upon a fixed disposition. And they want what is good for their friend for their friend's sake, not through mere feeling (pathos) but through a fixed disposition" (hexis: 1157 b 28–32).

Because each of the two is good objectively (haplōs), he is attractive to the other, who, as a good man, is habitually disposed toward what is noble or best. Each, in choosing the other for his intrinsic excellence to be his philos, identifies the other's goodness with his own, and desires now to preserve and increase the other's goodness as his own. "And in loving (philountes) a friend, they love that which is the good in relation to themselves (to hautois agathon): for the good man, in becoming beloved (philos) becomes the good to him by whom he is beloved. Each therefore loves (the other as) that which is good in relation to himself and so gives in return equally to the other, both in what he desires for the other and in pleasing the other" (1157 b 33–36). This is the essentially altruistic nature of true philia, which distinguishes it from all relationships based primarily upon the expectation of pleasure or profit. "Perfect philia is that between good men who are alike in their intrinsic excellence. For these desire good in the same way for each other with respect to that in which they are good; and they are good in themselves. But those desiring good for their friends for their friends' sake are most truly friends. For they feel this way because of what their friends are (di' hautous), and not because of some adventitious quality or circumstance (kata symbebēkos)" (1156 b 7–11).

6 The rational nature of proairesis and its connection with the person's ēthikē hexis is assumed from earlier descriptions in the N.E., e.g., 1113 a 9–14, 1139 a 31–35, 1139 b 4 f.

7 Aristotle's insistence that true good-will and true philia be motivated by the intrinsic goodness of the other and desire the other's good for the other's sake, seems incompatible with Adkins' statement that in Aristotle "all three types of philia are equally selfish." See his article cited in note 3 above, page 39. On the other hand, it also seems incompatible with the position that finds essential altruism in all three types of philia. It is true that, for Aristotle, in some cases a relationship which began on the basis of pleasure or advantage may develop into a more altruistic relationship based on growing mutual recognition of the intrinsic worth of the other. He cites the case of husband and wife,
What moves two men to join deliberately in true philia and to work for the good of the other is ultimately their own habitual disposition to choose what is good or noble (to kalon). And if there is any element in their relationship that might be called "selfish," it consists in that each desires to do what is noblest and best (ta kallista: 1168 b 28–31). Aristotle recognizes nobility in the act of doing good for someone (1169 a 8 f.); and he compares the disinterested benefactor to the artist, who continues to love the recipient of his gifts as he does his own existence, without looking to profit or return (1167 b 31—1168 a 8). The good man will be willing to give up wealth, honors, power, and even his life for the sake of his friends, since he chooses nobility (to kalon) before all other goods (1169 a 16–35).

A sharing association (koinonia) is essential to philia (1159 b 29 f.). In philia based on intrinsic goodness each partner is eager to do good for the other, and they vie with one another in this (1162 b 6–9). There is no "deal" or "contract" about mutual help, but each offers service to, or confers benefits upon, the other for the other's sake. Services or benefits rendered in return are not valued according to some objective measure (as in business arrangements) but according to the intention (proairesis) of the giver (1164 a 33–b 2). Among true friends it is not the value of the gift but the intention of the giver that counts.

In perfect philia, Aristotle explains, the good man loves his friend in the same way (though perhaps not to the same extent)⁸ that he loves himself (1166 a 1–33). For he desires and actively promotes the good of the other for the other's sake, just as he desires his own true good and acts to achieve it for the sake of that which is most truly himself, i.e., the intellectual part of himself. Secondly, he desires to preserve the existence, the life of his friend, for his friend’s sake, just as he desires to preserve his own life or existence, and particularly the life of that which is noblest in him, i.e., the intellectual part of himself. Third, he enjoys the company of his friend as he enjoys his own company, having pleasant memories of the past and hopes for the future, and a mind well stocked with matter for reflection. Fourth, he desires the same things that his friend desires, just as interiorly he is of one mind with himself, and all the powers of his soul reach out in harmony toward the same objectives. Lastly, his shared awareness of his friend’s joys and sorrows matches the keen consciousness of his own. Thus a good man feels the same way toward his friend as toward himself, so that, as Aristotle remarks, in this case it is true that “a friend is another self” (1166 a 31 f.).

---

⁸ Apparently Aristotle holds that the good man cannot love another as much as he loves himself, since even one who desires to excel in virtuous activity chooses for himself "the noblest, that is, the greatest goods" (1168 b 25–30; cf. 1159 a 8–12). On the self-love of the good man and his choosing the "best" for himself, see 1169 a 16–b 1. By equating the "best" with the "noblest" Aristotle reconciles a rational self-love with the selfprivation involved in giving up wealth, position, and life itself for one's philoi.

The personal identification of two good men in philia will be closest and best, of course, when they are both equally talented, fully developed in moral and intellectual excellence, and equal in status or function in society. To this effect Aristotle quotes a popular tag, “Philotês isotês” (1157 b 36), and later adds “kai homoiotês” (1159 b 3), but qualifies it as applying most of all to philia between good men, equal and similar in excellence (kat’ aretê). The equality and similarity of aretê demanded for perfect philia do in fact seem to lead Aristotle to deny the possibility of its existence even between persons so closely related as husband and wife, or father and son (1158 b 11 ff.). “For the aretê and the function of each of these is different, as is also the basis of their philia; therefore their emotional attachments (philêseis) and their philiai are also different. The same benefits are not exchanged in these relationships, nor should they be sought” (1158 b 17–21).

On the other hand, when two men of equal status and similar aretê join in philia, the benefits exchanged between them will themselves be equally excellent, at least in intention, which contributes to the perfection of this kind of philia in making it most enduring (1156 b 33–35; cf. 1157 b 33—1158 a 1). Such philia is least likely to be broken up by quarrels or slander. Even when one partner succeeds in conferring objectively greater benefit upon the other, this occasions not complaint or recrimination but gratification, since he achieves what he sincerely desires, namely, the greatest 9 The spirit, if not the sense, of this jingle is caught by J. A. K. Thomson in his rendition “charity is not only parity, it is also similarity” (The Ethics of Aristotle, Penguin Books, 1955, 243).

10 Aristotle does not deny that true philia, i.e., that based on aretê, can exist, for example, between husband and wife (1162 a 25–27). But he sees the nature, function, and proper aretê of man and woman as being so different that they exclude the equality and similarity demanded for perfect philia. Cf. 1158 b 11–28, 1160 b 32–35, 1162 a 16–27, and note 5, above.
benefit for the other, whom he loves for the other's sake, not his own (1162 b 6–13). And since each knows thoroughly the intrinsic goodness of the other, neither is likely to believe slanderous reports about the other and withdraw his philia on that account (1157 a 20–24; 1158 b 9 ff.).

But what makes philia between good men especially enduring is the fact that it is based upon what the two are essentially, i.e., upon their moral character (éthos) and intellect (nous) perfected by mature moral and intellectual aretē, which, like a second nature, constitutes the most permanent of dispositions (1156 b 11 f.). On the other hand, where profit or pleasure is the basis of philia, the partners do not love each other for what they are in themselves, but only in that some pleasure or profit comes to each from the other (1156 a 10–14). And this basis of attachment may change easily. As Aristotle says, "these philiai are based on a chance or adventitious circumstance (kata symbebēkos); for the philos is not beloved for being the man he is, but because one provides some benefit, another some pleasure. Such relationships, then, are easily broken off whenever the partners themselves change. For if ever they stop being mutually useful or pleasant they stop being philoi" (1156 a 16–21). Based on self-interested and changeable motives, such relationships can, in fact, be called philiai only by analogy, in so far as they resemble the usefulness and pleasure of perfect philia (1157 a 25–b 5; 1158 b 1–11).

For while perfect philia is essentially motivated by the aretē of the partners, Aristotle recognizes that such philia is also eminently pleasurable and useful, both objectively (haplōs) and with relation to the persons involved (allēloi: 1156 b 12–17; 1157 a 1–3; 1157 b 25–28). The pleasure and usefulness Aristotle has in mind here is not the gross type motivating those who associate for sensual gratification or expediency, but the pleasure that accompanies activity of the strictly human powers (especially the intellect) operating at their best (met' aretēs: cf. 1175 a 20–28; 1176 a 17–19), and the usefulness that helps to achieve what is good or noble (eis ta kala: 1158 a 26–34). For these are the pleasure and the usefulness offered by the truly good man (ho spoudaioi: 1158 a 33 f.).

The pleasure which a good man finds in association with another equally good, the enjoyment of his company, goes as deep as that which he derives from the consciousness of his own existence (1170 a 29–b 12; 1171 b 34 f.). For Aristotle equates existence with life activities, and human life specifically with the conscious activities of sense and intellect (1170 a 16–19). In a good man these faculties operate excellently (kat' aretēn), so that their activities are accompanied, and perfected, by the noblest and best of pleasure, that which arises when the highest human faculties are activated upon their highest objects according to their proper virtues (1176 b 15 ff.). Moreover, the good man is conscious of these activities of sense and intellect, conscious of his own existence, conscious that it is good; and the consciousness that one possesses what is by nature good gives true pleasure, so that the good man finds true pleasure in his own existence (1170 a 19–b 5). Therefore, he also finds his own existence desirable, being conscious that his life activities are both good and pleasant (1170 b 3–5).

Now, as we have seen, for Aristotle the good man is disposed toward an equally good philos as he is toward himself, since in his case a philos is "another self" (1170 b 5–7). Therefore, just as he finds his own existence desirable as being good and pleasant in itself, so he desires the existence of his philos as good and pleasant objectively (1170 b 7–10). Presumably, the consciousness of possessing, by mutual consent, the other good man as his philos brings him again the pleasure of possessing somehow what is objectively good.

It is essential to perfect philia, moreover, that the two good men live closely together, sharing their life activities equally. But the life activities specific to human beings are, as we have seen, those of sense perception and thought, so that the partners in perfect philia will spend much of their time in these activities, sharing their thoughts and perceptions. This is really what living closely together means for human beings, for in this way they share the consciousness of their existence (1170 b 10–14). However, since for the good man these activities are in themselves eminently pleasurable, he will doubtless communicate his own pleasure in them to his philos, and enjoy also the pleasure which his "other self" finds in his own.

Furthermore, Aristotle seems to believe that sharing their conscious activities augments the pleasure of the philoi to a degree not possible to either of them alone. First, he asserts that "we are able to contemplate others close to us better than ourselves, and their actions better than our own" (1169 b 33–35). The good man, then, will find even keener pleasure in this contemplation, since the activities of his philos, being other than his own, will be more clearly observable; being activities of another good man, they will be virtuous and similar to his own; being activities of his "other self," they will in that sense be his own and shared as his own. Clear consciousness of excellence somehow communicated to oneself gives rise to pleasure, and "the good man, as good, enjoys human acts excellently done (kat' aretên) . . . as the skilled musician finds pleasure in beautiful melodies. . . ." (1169 b 35—1170 a 4, 8–11).

Secondly, the pleasure enjoyed by two good men in perfect philia will be more continuous or sustained. For the activities that give rise to that pleasure will be more sustained because they are shared. "It is not easy to keep up continuous activity by oneself; it is easier to do so with the aid of and in relation to other people. The good man’s activity, therefore, which is pleasant in itself, will be more continuous if practised with friends....” (1170a 5–7, Rackham).

This also clarifies the sense in which Aristotle understands perfect philia to be useful or advantageous. It is useful, in fact necessary, for carrying on best the activities which are essential to human happiness, those of the intellectual as well as the moral life. For with the aid of philoi “men are better able both to think and to act” (noēsai kai praxai: 1155a 14–16). Aristotle does not forget this even when, at the end of Book X, he is stressing the self-sufficiency of contemplative activity: “The wise man, even when alone, can contemplate truth, and the better the wiser he is; he can perhaps do so better if he has fellow-workers; but still he is the most self-sufficient” (1177a 32–b 1).11 This is what we should expect, since for Aristotle man is essentially a zoon politikon, born to live with others and operating best in companionship (1169b 16–19). Finally, philia is useful to good men in making them better. Sharing their lives and activities is a constant training and exercise in excellence (1170a 11–13). For “the philia of good men is good, growing through their association; and they appear to grow better, sharing activities and correcting each other; for from each other they take on the impress of the traits they find pleasing in one another; whence the saying ‘noble deeds from noble men’” (1172a 11–14; cf. 1159b 2–7).

With all the qualifications he demands for the realization of this ideal of perfect philia, one is tempted to question whether Aristotle himself believed that instances of perfect philia could actually be found to exist. The answer seems to be that he did believe they existed, but only rarely. Philia between men of fully developed moral and intellectual excellence is rare, first of all, because such men are rare (1156b 24 f.). “It is not possible to have many philoi whom we prize for their own sake because of their intrinsic goodness. One would be fortunate to find even a few such”

---

11 At the conclusion (page 45) of his article cited in note 3, above, A. W. H. Adkins translate the isōs of 1177a 34 by an italicized “perhaps,” apparently to imply that Aristotle really doubts the necessity of fellow-workers for carrying on better the activity of théoria. He goes on to suggest that “if one can practice théoria without philoi,” then Aristotle believes that “behavior in accordance with aretē no longer requires associates, so that aretē and philia are no longer related,” and philosophers operate in “splendid isolation,” completely self-sufficient. A large conclusion to be supported by a single isōs = “perhaps.” On the other hand, Rackham (Loeb, 615) translates the same isōs as “no doubt,” and Thomson (op. cit., 304) as “doubtless.” The latter interpretation is supported by 1155a 14–16, 1169b 33–35, 1170a 5–7, 1172a 3–8. Adkins does not discuss these texts.
(1171 a 19 f.). Secondly, it takes long and close association to come to know another, to experience his intrinsic goodness, and learn to entrust oneself to him (1156 b 25–29; 1158 a 14 f.). Thirdly, even if there were many good men available, one could develop perfect philia with only a few, since one man cannot be deeply committed (philos sphadra) to many at the same time (1171 a 10–13); he cannot live closely together with many and share deeply the joys and sorrows of many (1170 b 33–1171 a 10). Finally, the good man’s philoi should also be philoi of each other, spending their days in company with one another. But this is very difficult when many are involved (1171 a 4–6).

Did Aristotle know perfect philia in his own life? In a beautiful passage at the end of Book IX he seems to break away from the theoretical to the existential plane of his own experience in describing how living close to one another is for philoi the most desirable thing there is (1171 b 29–32): “For philia is a sharing (koinónia); and as a man is to himself, so is he to his philos. As the consciousness of his own existence, then, is desirable to him, so is the consciousness of the existence of his philos. And since this consciousness is activated in their living close to one another, it is reasonable that they desire this. Whatever constitutes existence for each group of men, whatever makes their life worth living, in this they wish to occupy themselves with their philoi. Accordingly, some drink or dice together, others exercise or hunt together, or engage together in pursuing wisdom (symphilosophousin), each group spending their days together in that which they love best of everything in life. For wishing to live closely with their philoi, they carry on and share those activities which constitute for them the good life” (1171 b 32—1172 a 8, reading Bekker’s eu zēn for the final suzēn of the mss.).

In this reference to a group of philoi living close together and sharing the pursuit of wisdom we may perhaps detect a memory of Aristotle’s years in the Academy, or a glimpse of life with his later associates. But one philos comes to mind above all others, Hermias of Atarneus, in whose honor Aristotle composed a hymn to aretē.12

University of Illinois at Chicago Circle

12 I would like to express sincere thanks to John Rist, of the University of Toronto, and to Matthew Dickie and Richard Kraut, colleagues at the University of Illinois, Chicago, for reading and commenting on the substance of this paper. Fellow panelist Ladislaus Bolchazy has been most helpful with editorial suggestions. The deficiencies of the paper are solely my own.
Theophilus of Antioch: Fifty-five Emendations

MIROSLAV MARCOVICH

(3) I. 8. 3. Ἡ οὖν οἶδας ὅτι ἀπάντων πραγμάτων ἡ πίστις προηγεῖται; τὸ γὰρ δύναται θερίσαι γεωργός, εὰν μὴ πρῶτον πιστεύῃ τὸ σπέρμα τῆς γῆς; ἡ τέσσαρα διαιρῆται τὴν θάλασσαν, εὰν μὴ πρῶτον ἐαυτὸν πιστεύῃ τῷ πλοίῳ καὶ τῷ κυβερνῆτῃ; τὸς δὲ κάμων δύναται θεραπευθῆναι, εὰν μὴ πρῶτον ἐαυτὸν πιστεύῃ τῷ ἱερῷ; Read: ἡ τέσσαρα διαιρῆται τὴν θάλασσαν . . . . Compare line 10 Ἐπί οὖν γεωργοῦ πιστεύει τῇ γῇ καὶ ὁ π λ ὀ ν τ ἐ ς, ὁ ἡ τέσσαρα διαιρῆται τὴν θάλασσαν . . . . Read: Ἐπί οὖν γεωργοῦ πιστεύει τῇ γῇ καὶ ὁ π λ ὀ ν τ ἐ ς.

(4) I. 11. 5. Θεός γὰρ οὖν ἔστιν (sc. ὁ βασιλεύς), ἀλλὰ ἀνθρώπος, ὅποι θεόν τεταγμένος, οὐκ εἰς τὸ προσκυνεῖταί, ἀλλὰ εἰς τὸ δικαίως κρίνει . . . Oὕτως οὖδὲ προσκυνεῖθαι ἀλλ’ ἡ μόνη θεόφ. Read: Ὅτως οὖδὲ προσκυνεῖθαι ἀλλ’ ἡ μόνη θεόφ.

(5) I. 13. 3. Εἴτε πιστεύεις μὲν Ἰθραλέα καύσαντα ἐαυτῶν ἵνα καὶ Ἀκαθὴρον κεραυνοθέταν ἔγγερθείναι. τὰ δὲ ὅπο τὸ θεόν σου λεγόμενα ἀπιστεῖς; ἦσος καὶ ἐπιδείξω σου νεκρὸν ἔγγερθείναι καὶ ἱώντα, καὶ τούτου ἀπιστήσεις. Read:
éγγυερθαι, τὰ δὲ ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ σοι λεγόμενα ἀπιστεῖς. Ἰσως κ ἃν ἐπιδείξω σοι νεκρὸν . . .

(7) Ι. 13. 22. Εἰ δὲ καὶ θανασιστῶτερον θέαμα θέλεις θεάσοσθαί γι νῦν ὁ μὲ νῦν νῦν προς ἀπόδειξιν ἀναστάσεως, οὐ μόνον τῶν ἐπιγείων προγιμάτων ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν ἐν οὐρανῷ, κατανόησον τὴν ἀνάστασιν τῆς σελήνης τὴν κατὰ μήνα γε νῦν ο μὲ νῦν, τῶν φθινει, ἀποθνῄσκει, ἀνίσταται πάλιν, έτι ἄκουσον καὶ ἐν σοι αὐτῷ ἔργον ἀναστάσεως γι νῦν ο μὲ νῦν, κἂν ἄρνοις, ὑ ἄνθροπε. Read: τὴν κατὰ μήνα γνωμένην καὶ compare γνωμόμενον twice in the context.

(8) Ι. 14. 7. . . . ἀλλὰ πιστεῶν πειθαρχῶν θεῶν ὡς, εἰ βούλει, καὶ σοῦ ὑποτεγιθή πιστεῶν αὐτῷ, μὴ νῦν ἀπιστήςσας πειθής αἰνίωμεν, τότε ἐν αἰώνιοις τιμωρίαις. Read: μὴ νῦν ἀπιστήσας <ἀδίκος> πειθής . . . (ἰσοτελεύτων).

(9) ΙΙ. 2. 1. Καὶ γὰρ γελοῖον μοι δοκεῖ λαθῶσως μέν και πλάστας ἡ ζωγράφοις ἡ χανωτίς πλάσκεσαι τε καὶ γράφειν καὶ γλύφειν καὶ χανωτίς καὶ θεῶν κατασκευάζειν, οἶ, ἐπον γένωται ὑπὸ τῶν τεκνιτῶν, οὐδὲν αὐτοῦ ἤγονται . . . Read: οὐδὲν α ὁ τ ὁ ἤτα χέρναται καὶ compare line 8 (οἱ ποιησάντες) ἤγονται θεῶν αὐτούς.

(10) ΙΙ. 3. 9 = Oracula Sibyllina, Fr. 2 Geffcken.

Εἰ δὲ θεοὶ γεννώσαι καὶ ἀδάνατοι γε μένων, πλείονες ανθρώπων γεγενήμενοι αν θεοὶ ἤσαον, οὐδὲ τόπος στήναι ἕθητος οὐκ ἀν τοῦ ὑπηρέξεσ.

ἀν θεοὶ Ραχαί: οἱ δὲ θεοὶ Venetus 496 s. XI. Read: γεγενήμενοι οἱ (δὲ) θεοὶ ἤσαον with Ioannes Opsopoeus (J. Koch), Paris, 1599, and compare ΙΙ. 9. 8.

Grant translates: "... next they assume that uncreated matter is also God, and say that matter was coeval with God.‖ I do not think he is right. Read instead: εἴτε ὑποτίθενται (παρά) θεῶν καὶ ὑλὴ ἀγένητον καὶ compare Hippolytus, Elenchos I. 19. 4 (Plato) τὴν μὲν οὖν ὑλὴν ἄρχῃ εἶναι καὶ σύγχρονον τῷ θεῷ . . . (The scribe of the Venetus drops a peri at Ι. 1. 13 too.)

Accordingly, Ad Autolycum II. 13. 5: Θεοῦ δὲ τὸ δυνατὸν ἐν τούτῳ δείκνυται, ὡς πρῶτον μὲν ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων ποιῆ τὰ γνώμενα, καὶ ως (Otto) βούλεται, should read: τὰ γνώμενα, καθὼς (Venenus) βούλεται.

(13) II. 6. 14 = Hesiod, Theogony 129 f.

χαράεσαν ἐν αὐτοῖς Venetus. The text is good as transmitted. Read: θέα νυμφῆς / Νυμφών, "the beautiful sight (or spectacle) of the Nymphs in the hills." This is the way Theophilus understood ΘΕΑΝ in his source.

(15) II. 7. 26. "Οθέν καὶ ἐν τῇ Διονύσα φυλῇ δήμῳ εἰσὶ κατακεχωρισμένοι. Ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰς προσωνυμίας ἔχουσιν οἱ κατ’ αὐτοὺς δήμους: Ἀριάδνης ἀπὸ τῆς θυγατρός Μίνω, γυναῖκος δὲ Διονύσου, παιός πατροφήλης τῆς μικθείσης Διονύσου ἐν μορφῇ ἡ Πρύμνη ἡ, Θεστίς ἀπὸ Θεστίου τοῦ Ἀλλαίας πατρὸς,... Read: "Οθέν καὶ τὰς προσωνυμίας ἔχουσιν οἱ κατ’ αὐτοὺς δήμους {οθέν} (huc transposuerunt Meineke et Jacoby), καὶ ἐν τῇ Διονύσα φυλῇ δήμῳ εἰσὶν κατακεχωρισμένοι οἱ θυγατρὸς: Ἀλλής ..., Δημηνείρης ..., γυναῖκος δὲ Ἡρακλέους, Ἀριάδνης ἀπὸ τῆς θυγατρός Μίνω, γυναῖκος δὲ Διονύσου, παιός πατροφήλης τῆς μικθείσης Διονύσου ἐν μορφῇ <ταύρου>,

Πρύμνης ἀπὸ Πρυμνίδος  *, Θεστίς ἀπὸ Θεστίου ... and compare P. Oxy. 2465, Fr. 3, col. II, line 14; Pausanias II. 4. 4; R. M. Grant, Vigiliae Christ. 6 (1952), 157 f.

(16) II. 8. 25 = Sophocles, Oedip. Rex 978 f.

Πρόνοια δ’ ἐστὶν οὐδενός, εἰκῆ κράτιστον ξήν, ὅπως δόματο τις and II. 8. 49 = Euripides, Fr. 391 N.²

Σπουδάζωμεν δὲ πόλλ' ὑπ' ἐλπίδων, μάτην πόνους ἔχοντες, οὐδὲν εἰδότες.

Read: πρώτοια δ' ἐστίν οὐδένος ἡμεῖς (= Sophocles) and πόνους ἔχοντες, οὐδὲν εἰδότες (= Orion, Floril. 5. 7).

(17) II. 8. 43. Καὶ τά των ἄλλα μνήμα εἰπόντες ἀσύμφωνα ἑαυτοῖς ἐξείπον. ὁ γοῦν Σοφοκλῆς ἀπρονοησάν ἐπίρων Β. Einarson ἐν ἐτέρῳ λέγει: "Θεοῦ δὲ πλῆθυν ὑμῖν ὑπὲρπητῆδα βροτός." Πλὴν καὶ πλῆθυν εἰσήγαγον ἦ ἡ μοναρχίαν εἰπον. ... Read: ἀπρονοησάν (ἐπίρων) ἐν ἐτέρῳ λέγει: ... Πλὴν καὶ πλῆθυν (θεῶν) εἰσήγαγον and compare the phrase πλῆθυν θεῶν at II. 10. 25; 28.5-7 (three times); 33.3; 38. 17.

(18) II. 10. 1. Καὶ πρῶτον μὲν συμφόνως εἴδατε ἁμάς ὅτι εἶ οὐκ ὄντων τὰ πάντα ἐποίησαν. οὐ γὰρ τί τῷ θεῷ συνήκμασεν. Read: ὅτι εἶ οὐκ ὄντων τὰ πάντα ἐποίησαν (ὁ θεὸς). οὐ γὰρ τί τῷ θεῷ συνήκμασεν and compare 2 Mac. 7:28 ὅτι οὐκ εἶ οὕτως ἐποίησαν αὐτὸ τὸ θεός.

(19) II. 10. 32. Ταῦτα ἐν πρώτοις διάδακες ἡ θεία γραφή, τρόπῳ τινὶ ἐξ ἔλθεν γενετήριν, ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ γεγονὼν, ἄφ' ἂς πεποίηκεν καὶ δεδήμουργηκεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν κόσμον. Read: ὑπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ γεγονὼν (ἀναφαίνουσα), ἄφ' ἂς . . .

(20) II. 12. 8. Πολλοὶ μὲν οὖν τῶν συγγραφέων ἐμμυρίσαντο καὶ ἠθέλησαν περὶ τούτων διήγησιν ποησάμεθα, καίτοι λαβόντες ἐντεύθεν τας ἀφορμὰς, ἦτοι περὶ κόσμου κτίσεως ἢ περὶ φύσεως ἀνθρώπου, καὶ οὐδὲ τὸ τιχὸν ἔναιμα ἐξίκει τῷ τῆς ἀληθείας εξείπον. Read: Πολλοὶ μὲν οὖν τῶν συγγραφέων (τὴν γραφὴν) ἐμμυρίσαντο καὶ ἠθέλησαν . . . ποησάμεθα, (ἀλλ' ἐπταισαν), καίτοι λαβόντες ἐντεύθεν τὰς ἀφορμὰς.

(21) II. 12. 25. Τὸ δὲ εἰπεῖν Ἡσιόδον τον ποιητήν ἥκοις γεγενήσθαι "Ερεβός καὶ τὴν Γῆν καὶ Ἕρωτα, κυρεύοντα τῶν κατ' αὐτὸν τε θεῶν καὶ ἀνθρώπων, μάταιον καὶ ψυχὴ ρόν τὸ ῥήμα αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀλλότριον πάσης ἀληθείας δεικνύει. Grant translates: "And as for Hesiod’s statement that from Chaos were created Erebus and Earth and Eros, which rules over gods (as he considers them) and men, his discourse is futile and frigid and entirely alien to the truth." Read instead: Τὸ δὲ εἰπεῖν Ἡσιόδον . . . μάταιον (sc. ἐστὶ), καὶ ψυχὴ ρόν τὸ ῥήμα αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀλλότριον πάσης ἀληθείας δεικνύει. Compare Clement, Strom. VI. 18. 6 ψυχῶς Theognis: ψυχῶς Laurentianus. Hippolytus, Elenchos VI. 19. 4 ψυχῶς Roeper: ψυχῶς Parisinus.

(22) II. 13. 1. Άλλα καὶ τὸ ἐκ τῶν ἐπιγείων κάτωθεν ἄρξασθαι [καὶ del. Nautin] λέγει τὴν ποίησιν τῶν γεγενεμένοιν ἀνθρώπων καὶ ταπεινῶν καὶ πάνω ἀσθένες τὸ ἐννόμα αὐτοῦ ὡς πρὸς θεὸν ἐστίν. Read: τὸ ἐκ τῶν ἐπιγείων καὶ οἱ κάτωθεν ἄρξασθαι λέγει τὴν ποίησιν . . . ἀνθρώπων (sc. ἐστὶ), καὶ ταπεινῶν καὶ πάνω ἀσθένες τὸ ἐννόμα αὐτοῦ. . .

(23) II. 13. 12. Ἡν δὲ λέγει (sc. Gen. 1:1–2) δυνάμει ἐδοφος καὶ θεμέλιον,
Illinois Classical Studies, IV

24. II. 14. 22. Καὶ ὁσπέρ αὐτοὶ ἔσον ἐπερείπεσι ἐν αἷς περιπετέεται τὰ πλοία καὶ ἑξαπολύεται ἐν αὐταῖς οἱ κατερχόμενοι, οὕτως εἰσὶν αἱ διδασκαλίαι τῆς πλάνης, λέγω δὲ τῶν αἱρέσεων, αἱ ἐξαπολύουσα νοῦς προσιόντας αὐταῖς. οὐ γὰρ ὀδηγοῦνται ὑπὸ τοῦ λόγου τῆς ἀληθείας, ἀλλὰ καθάπερ πειρατεῖ, ἐπάν π η ῥ ὢ σ σ ὦ σ ῥ σ τάς νοήσει, ἐπὶ τοῦ προειρήμους τόπους περιπετεύονται, ὅπως ἐξαπολέσωσαν αὐτάς, οὕτως συμβαίνει καὶ τοῖς πλακωμένοις ἀπὸ τῆς ἀληθείας ἐξαπολύεται ὑπὸ τῆς πλάνης. Grant translates: “but just as pirates, when they have filled ships, run them on the places mentioned above, in order to destroy them, so it happens that those who stray from the truth are destroyed by error.” But pirates do not fill ships before destroying them: they incapacitate (disable, maim) them. Thus read: πηρώσουσιν for the transmitted πηρώσωσιν and compare Hippolytus, Elenchos VIII. 14. δ τοῖς μὴ πεπηρωμένοις παντελῶ τὴν διάνοιαν, where Parisinus has πεπηρωμένοις.

25. II. 17. 14. Θηρία δὲ ἀνόμαιστα τὰ ψώκα ἀπὸ τοῦ θα ἡ ῥ ὦ ε ᾗ θ α ἵ, οὕχ ὡς κακὰ ἀρχηθὲν γεγενειμένα ἡ ἱσόβόλα. οὐ γὰρ τι κακὸν ἀρχηθὲν γέγον ε ἀπὸ θεοῦ ἀλλα ὡς πάντα καλά καὶ καλὰ λιῶ, ἡ δὲ ἀμαρτία ἡ περὶ τὸν ἀνθρώπον κεκάκωκεν αὐτὰ: τοῦ γὰρ ἀνθρώπου παραβάντος καὶ αὐτὰ συμπαρῆβη. Ὁσπερ γὰρ ἅπατοςς οἰκίας εἶν αὐτός εἰς πρόσεχη, ἀναγκαίως καὶ οἱ οἰκίαι εὐτάκτως ζῶσιν, ἔν ὁ δὲ κύριος ἀμαρτάνῃ, καὶ οἱ δούλοι συναμαρτάνωσιν, τῶ αὐτῷ τρόπῳ γέγονε καὶ τὰ περὶ τὸν ἀνθρώπον κύριον όντα ἀμαρτήσασθαι, καὶ τὰ δοῦλα συνήμαρτεν. In the first sentence read: Θηρία δὲ ἀνόμαιστα τὰ ζώα ἀπὸ τοῦ ἔθνους (J. C. T. Otto) for the transmitted ἔθνεσθαι: “The animals have got the name ‘beasts’ from their becoming brutal (malignant),” and not: “Wild animals are so called from their being hunted,” as Grant has it. As for the idea of ἀποστασία from God by the original sin of man, compare II. 28. 28: Δαίμων δὲ καὶ δράκων καλεῖται διὰ τὸ ἀποδεδρακέναι αὐτῶν ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ ἀγγέλος γὰρ ἦν ἐν πρώτοις. As for the palaeography, compare III. 5. 5 and 10 κατεσθέσθαι J. C. Wolf: κατασθέσθαι (both times) Venetus. In the second sentence read: τῷ αὐτῷ τρόπῳ γέγονε καὶ τὰ ψόκα κακὰ, καὶ ὁ σ ῥ ὢ (“through, because of,” LSJ, s. v., C III 7) τὸν ἀνθρώπου, κύριον όντα, ἀμαρτήσασθαι, καὶ τὰ δοῦλα συνήμαρτεν.

26. II. 18. 7. “Εἰτε μὴ καὶ ὡς βοσθείας χρῆσθων ὁ θεὸς εὐρίσκεται λέγων.
"Ποιήσωμεν ἄνθρωπον κατ’ εἰκόνα καὶ καθ’ ὁμοίωσιν." οὐκ ἄλλω δὲ τινὶ εὑρήκειν "Ποιήσωμεν," ἀλλ’ ἥ τῷ ἐαυτοῦ λόγῳ καὶ τῇ ἐαυτοῦ σοφίᾳ. ποιήσος δὲ αὐτὸν καὶ εὐλογήσωσιν εἰς τὸ αὐξάνεσθαι καὶ πληρώσαι τὴν γῆν, ὑπέταξεν αὐτῷ . . .

In the first sentence read: "Ετι μὴν καὶ ἂτε, ὡς βοσθείας χρῆξων, ὁ θεὸς εὗρισκεται λέγων "Ποιήσωμεν . . . ὁμοίωσιν," οὐκ ἄλλῳ δ’ ἥ τινι εὑρήκειν . . .

. . . and compare line 3 ἐν τῷ γὰρ εἰπεῖν τοῦ θεοῦ . . ., "When God said . . ."

In the second sentence read: εἰς τὸ αὐξάνεσθαι <καὶ πληρώσαι> καὶ πληρώσαι τὴν γῆν = Gen. 1:28, and Theophilus II. 11. 54; 23. 7; 32. 23.

(27) II. 19. 20. Μετὰ δὲ τὸ πλάσας τὸν ἄνθρωπον ὁ θεὸς ἐξελέξατο αὐτῷ χωρίον ἐν τοῖς τόποις τοῖς ἀνατολικοῖς, διάφορον φωτὶ, διανυὲς ἀέρι λαμπροτέρῳ, φυτοῖς παγκάλοις, ἐν ὧ ἐθέτο τὸν ἄνθρωπον. Read: διάφορον φωτὶ, διανυὲς ἀέρι λαμπροτέρῳ, <διέχον> φυτοῖς παγκάλοις . . .

(28) II. 24. 2. Ἔν γὰρ πρώτοις μόνα ἦν τὰ ἐν τῇ τρίτῇ ἡμέρᾳ γεγενενείναι, φυτὰ καὶ σπέρματα καὶ χλῶν τὰ δὲ ἐν τῷ παραδείσῳ ἐγένετο διαφόρῳ καλλονή καὶ ἀραιότητι . . . Καὶ τὰ μὲν λοιπὰ φυτὰ ὅμοια καὶ ὁ κόσμος ἐσχήκεν τὰ δὲ δύο ξύλα, τὸ τῆς ζωῆς καὶ τὸ τῆς γνώσεως, οὐκ ἔσχήκεν ἑτέρα γῆ . . . Read, first: διάφορα καλλονή (and compare No. 27: διάφορον φωτὶ); second, ὅμοια καὶ ᾧ ὁ κόσμος ἐσχήκεν (ὅτι ὅμοια ὧν καὶ κ. ἔσχ.).

(29) II. 24. 9. "Καὶ ἐφύτευσεν ὁ θεὸς παραδείσου ἐν Ἑδέμ κατὰ ἀνατολάς, καὶ ἐθετο ἐκεῖ τὸν ἄνθρωπον καὶ ἐξαντίςεικν οὗ θεὸς ἐτι ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς πάν τῶν ξυλῶν ἀραιόν εἰς ὑπάσων καὶ καλλὸν εἰς βρωσίν" (Gen. 2:8—9). τὸ ὁν ἐτι ἐκ τῆς γῆς καὶ κατὰ ἀνατολάς σαφῶς διδάσκει ἡμᾶς ἡ θεία γραφὴ τὸν παράδεισον ὑπὸ τοῦτον τὸν οὐρανόν, ὥ δὲ καὶ ἀνατολὰς καὶ γῆ εἰς. Read: τ ὥ τον ἐτι ἐκ τῆς γῆς καὶ κατὰ ἀνατολάς" σαφῶς διδάσκει ἡμᾶς θεία γραφή τὸν παράδεισον ὑπὸ τοῦτον ὅντα: τὸν οὐρανόν, ὥ δὲ . . .

(30) II. 25. 18. Ἀλλος τε ἐπὶ τὸν νόμον κελεύσῃ ἀπέκεχαθαι ἀπὸ τοὺς καὶ μὴ ὑπακούης τὸς, δήλου ὦν ὅ τὸ νόμος κόλασι παρέχει, ἄλλα ἡ ἐπέθεει καὶ ἡ παρακοή. καὶ γὰρ παρὴθείδη τέκνων ἐντείπτερο προστάσατε ἀπέκεχαθαι τοὺς καὶ ἐπὶ οὔν ὧν ὑπακοήν τῇ πατρικῇ ἐντολῇ, δέρεται καὶ ἐπίτιμαις τυγγάνει διὰ τὴν παρακοήν καὶ οὔκ ἐδή διὰ τὰ π ὑ ἀ τα ρ α γ μ μ α τ α πληγαὶ εἰς, ἀλλ’ ἡ παρακοή τῷ ἐπεκουντὶ ὑβρίς περιπετεύεται. Read: καὶ οὔν ἐδή διὰ τὰ πρ’ος ἁγματα πληγαὶ εἰς and compare ο νόμος καὶ προστάσεις in the context; II. 15. 28 τῶν ἀφισταιμένων ἄνθρωπων ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ, καταλιπόντων τὸν νόμον καὶ τὰ προστάματα αὐτῶν.

(31) II. 26. 1. Καὶ τούτου δὲ ὁ θεὸς μεγάλης εὐεργεσίας παρέσχεν τῷ ἄνθρωπῳ, τὸ μὴ διαμείνα ταυτόν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα ἐν ἀμαρτίᾳ ὄντα. ἀλλα τρόπον τινὶ ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἐξορισμῷ ἐξέβαλεν αὐτόν ἐκ τοῦ παραδείσου . . . Read: τὸ μὴ διαμείνα ταυτόν ἀθανασίων εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα, ἐν ἀμαρτίᾳ ὄντα καὶ ἐξέβαλεν αὐτόν. . . . Compare lines 8 τὴν ἀνάστασιν, 12 ὑπὲρ τῆς ἀναστάσεις ὑγιὴς εὐρέθη, λέγω δὲ ἀστικὸ καὶ δίκαιο καὶ ἀθλάντος, and II. 27. 19 καὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τιχών "κληρονομήσῃ τὴν ἄφθοραν" (1 Cor. 15:50).
(32) II. 28. 8. . . . μήπως οὖν ὑπολημφθῆ ὡς ὅτε δὲ μὲν ὁ θεὸς ἐποίησεν τὸν ἄνδρα, ἐτέρος δὲ τὴν γυναίκα, διὰ τούτο {οὖν} ἐποίησεν τοὺς δύο ἄμφων· οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ <ἐπλασαν τὸν ἄνδρα μόνον ἐκ γῆς ὑπά> διὰ τούτου δειχθῇ τὸ μνητήριον τῆς μοναρχίας τῆς κατὰ τὸν θεόν, ἀμα δὲ ἐποίησεν ὁ θεὸς τὴν γυναίκα αὐτῷ <ἐκ τῆς πλευρᾶς αὐτοῦ> ἦν πλείων ἡ ἐκείνω εἰς αὐτὴν. Grant adopts both supplements suggested by P. Nautin (Vigiliae Christ. 11, 1957, 218–224). But I think the first one is unwarranted. The mystery of the divine unity (μοναρχία) is demonstrated by the fact that God has created both Adam and Eve together (τοὺς δύο ἄμφων) and at the same time (ἐμα). And Adam’s love for his wife is being guaranteed by the fact that she was made out of his rib. Thus read: οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ <ὡς> καὶ διὰ τούτου δειχθῇ τὸ μνητήριον τῆς μοναρχίας τῆς κατὰ τὸν θεόν, ἀμα δὲ ἐποίησεν ὁ θεὸς τὴν γυναίκα αὐτῷ, <ἀλλὰν τὴν πλευρὰν αὐτοῦ> = Gen. 2:21–22> ἦν πλείων ἡ ἐκείνω εἰς αὐτήν. For such a δὲ see Denniston, Greek Particles, p. 225.

(33) II. 30. 6. Τῷ δὲ Ἕνων ἐγένετο ύπος ὁνόματι Γαϊάδα· ἐγέννησαν τὸν καλοῦμενον Μεθήλ, καὶ Μεθήλ τὸν Μαθοῦσαλά, <καὶ Μαθοῦσαλά Γεσνέρ> τὸν Λάμεχ. Read: Γαϊάδα· <καὶ Γαϊάδ = Gen. 4:18> ἐγέννησαν. . .

(34) II. 30. 20. Τοῖς δὲ βουλόμενοι καὶ φιλομαθέσι καὶ περὶ πασῶν τῶν γενεῶν εὐκολὸν ἐστίν ἐπιδειξία διὰ τῶν ἁγίων γραφῶν, καὶ γὰρ ἐκ μέρους ἡμῖν γεγένηται ἦδη λόγος ἐν ἐτέρῳ λόγῳ, ὡς ἐπάνω προειρήκαμεν, τῆς γενεαλογίας ἡ τάξις εἰς τῇ πρώτῃ βίβλῳ τῇ περὶ ἱστορίων. Read: Τοῖς δὲ βουλόμενοι . . . καὶ περὶ πασῶν τῶν γενεῶν ἡ γνώμαι = III. 35. 45> εὐκολὸν ἐστίν <ὁμία> ἐπιδειξία διὰ τῶν ἁγίων γραφῶν καὶ γὰρ ἐκ μέρους ἡμῖν γεγένηται ἦδη λόγος ἐν ἐτέρῳ {λόγῳ}, ὡς ἐπάνω προειρήκαμεν, καὶ ἐστὶν πάσης τῆς γενεαλογίας ἡ τάξις εἰς τῇ πρώτῃ βίβλῳ . . . and compare III. 3. 23 ἀκριβέστερον πεποιηκότων ἡμῶν ὑμῶν ἐν ἐτέρῳ τοῖς περὶ αὐτῶν λόγων.

(35) II. 30. 25. Ταῦτα δὲ πάντα ἡμᾶς διδάσκει τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἄγιον, τὸ διὰ Μωσεός καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν προφητῶν, ὡςτε. . . . Read: τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἄγιον, τὸ διὰ Μωσεός καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν προφητῶν <λαλοῦν,> ὡςτε . . . and compare II. 33. 13 οἴτινς ὑπὸ πνεύματος ἁγίων διδασκόμεθα, τὸ λαλῆσας εἰς τοῖς ἁγίοις προφήταις . . .; II. 10. 12 Οὗτος οὖν (sc. ὁ Λόγος), ὁν πνεῦμα θεοῦ . . ., καθήχετο εἰς τοὺς προφήτας καὶ δι’ αὐτῶν ἐλάλει . . .

(36) II. 31. 2. Πρῶτη πόλις Βαβυλών, καὶ Ὀρέχ καὶ Ἀρχάλ καὶ Χαλάνη ἐν τῇ γῇ Σενναρ. καὶ βασιλεὺς ἐγένετο αὐτῶν ὁνόματι Νεβρῷθ. ἐκ τούτων ἔξηλθεν ὁνόματι Ασσουρ· ὅθεν καὶ Λασσύριοι προσγορεύοντα. Read: ὁνόματι Νεβρῷθ. ἐκ τούτων ἔξηλθεν ὁνόματι Ασσουρ = Gen. 10:11:

Line 25: Σίβυλλα μὲν οὖτως σεσήμακεν . . . Oracula Sibyllina, III. 102 f.

Geffcken:
Read: Σίβυλλα μὲν (τοῦτο) οὖτως ... and ἔν' ἀλλήλους (Rzach): cf. Or. Sib. III. 119 and XI. 13 ἔν' ἀλλήλους ἔριν ἀφραν.

Line 67: ἐπειτα ἐξασθεῖσαι "Ἐφρων καὶ ὁ Χετταῖος ἐπικληθεῖσι. Read: "Ἐφρων ὁ καὶ Χετταῖος ....

(37) II. 33. 1. Τὶς οὖν πρὸς ταῦτα έσχύνει τῶν καλομὲνών σοφῶν καὶ ποιητῶν (ἡ) ἱστοριογράφων τὸ ἄλλης εἶπεῖν, πολὺ μεταγενεστέρων αὐτῶν γεγενημένων ... ἔρημη γάρ αὐτοῦς μεμνηματά πάντων καὶ τῶν πρὸ κατακλυσμοῦ γεγονότων, περὶ τοῦ κτίσματος κόσμου καὶ ποιησεως ἀνθρώπου, τά τε ἔξης συμβαίνα ἄκριβῶς ἐξειπεῖν τόυς παρ᾽ Ἀιγυπτίους προφήτας ἡ Χαλδαῖος τόυς τέ ἅλλους συγγραφεῖς ... Read: Ἐρημή γάρ αὐτοῦς μεμνηματά πάντων (καὶ τῶν πρὸ κατακλυσμοῦ ... τά τε ἔξης συμβαίνα)., (ἡ αὐτοῖς) ἄκριβῶς ἐξειπεῖν τούς ... προφήτας ... and compare III. 2. 1 Ἐρημή γάρ τοὺς συγγραφόντος αὐτοῖς αὐτόπτας γεγενήθαι περὶ ὧν διαβεβαιώνται, ἡ ἄκριβος μεμαθηκέναι ὑπὸ τῶν τεθεαμένων αὐτό. III. 17. 5 "Ετὶ μὴν μάντεις καὶ προγνώστας γεγενήθαι κατὰ τοὺς συγγραφεῖς, καὶ (τοῦ)τους (sc. "the historians" ego: τοὺς Venetus, "people" Grant) παρ’ αὐτῶν μαθόντας ἄκριβος συγγραφέανα φανοῖ.

(38) II. 36. 26 = Oracula Sibyllina, Fr. 1 Geffcken

23 Τύφω καὶ μανίη δὲ βαδίζετε, καὶ τρίβον ὅρθην εὐθεῖαν προλογίστες ἀπῆλθετε, καὶ δι’ ἀκανθῶν 25 καὶ σκολόσων ἐπλανάσθη. Βροτοί πάνασθείς μάταιοι βεβαιμένοι σκοτή καὶ ἀφεγγή νυκτὶ μελανη, καὶ λίπετε σκοτίν νυκτός, φωτός δὲ λάβεσθε.
30 Ω τὸ σ ἵδου πάντεσσα σαφῆς ἀπλάνητος διάρχει. ἔλθετε, μή σκοτίνδε δι διώκετε καὶ γνόφον αἰεί.
32 νελίου γυλυκουδερκές ἱδου φάος ἕξοχα λάμπει.

What does 28 οὖτος refer to? Clement (Strom. V. 115, 5–6) understood it as God. But God is not likely to bear the epithet ἀπλάνητος, “unerring, not going astray.” Now, since οὐτος cannot refer to the neuter 27 φῶς, G. W. H. Lampe (Patristic Lexicon, s.v. ἀπλάνητος) referred it to 23 τρίβος. This is unlikely, too. For, first, 23 τρίβος is too far from 28 οὖτος. And second, τρίβος is used by Sibyl as feminine in 23 f. I think 28 οὖτος refers to 30 ἱλιος, the line being displaced. Thus read:

27 καὶ λάπετε σκοτίν νυκτός, φω τὸ σ ἵδου λάβεσθε.
29 ἔλθετε, μή σκοτίνδε δι διώκετε καὶ γνόφον αἰεί.
30 ή ελί οὐ γυλυκουδερκές ἤδου φάος ἕξοχα λάμπει.
32 οὐ τὸ σ ἵδου πάντεσσα σαφῆς, ἀπλάνητος διάρχει.

Helios is known as “unswerving, unerring” par excellence. Sibyl may have in mind Heraclitus Fr. 52 Marcovich (= B 94 Diels): "Ἡλίος οὖχ ὑπερβήσεται μέτρα, "Helios will never overstep his path," and in the Orphic hymn to Helios (8.9 Quandt) we read: κόσμου τῶν ἐναρμόνων δρόμον ἔλκων.

(39) II. 36. 39 = Or. Sib., Fr. 3 Geffcken. Καὶ πρὸς τοὺς γεννητοὺς λεγομένους ἐφή (sc. Σίβυλλα).

7 τῶν τ’ ἐνυδρῶν πάλι γενή (sc. θεός) ἀνήρμονον πολὺ πλῆθος,
8 ἐρπετά δ’ ἐ γαίης κυνούμενα ψυχοσφεῖται ...
28 καὶ πετεινὰ ἀβέβεθε καὶ ἐρπετά θηρία γαίης
29 καὶ λίθων ξόανα κ α ὶ ἀγάλματα χειροποίητα ...

Read, first: Καὶ πρὸς τοὺς γεννητοὺς λεγομένους <θεόν> ἐφή. Second:

8 ἐρπετὰ δ’ <αὔ> γαίης κυνούμενα ψυχοσφεῖται and compare line 28 ἐρπετὰ θηρία γαίης. δ’ αὔ in the same position is to be found at Or. Sib. I. 17; 173; 197; 211; 231; 297; 308; 388, et passim.

(Auratus, Rzach, Geffcken read instead: δ’ [or τ’] ἐν γαίη, Turnebus δ’ ἐκ γαίης, Wolf δ’ γαίη). Third, read:

29 καὶ λίθων ξόαν’, εἰκαί’ ἀγάλματα χειροποίητα and compare Or. Sib. IV. 28–28a (Clem. Protrept. 62. 1):

καὶ βωμοῦς, εἰκαία λίθων ἀφθρύματα κωφῶν,
{kαὶ λίθων ξόανα καὶ ἀγάλματα χειροποίητα.}

(40) II. 36. 73 = Or. Sib., Fr. 3:

34 ὅς δ’ ἐστὶ ζωή τε καὶ ἀφθινόν ἄνεανον φῶς, καὶ μέλατος ὑπὸ — γλυκερώτερον ἀνδράσι χάρμα ἐκπροχέει χαί — τῶ δῆ μόνῳ αὐγένα κάμπτεν, καὶ τρίβουν αἰώνεσιν ἐν εὐσεβείᾳ ἀνακλύνοις.

34 δ’ Geffcken: oðde Venetus: oð δ’ Castalio (1546) 36 δ’ Gesner (1546):

37 ἀνακλύνοις Rzach: ἀνακλύνοι Ven.

Read:

34 ὅδ’ ἐστὶ ζωή τε καὶ ἀφθινόν ἄνεανον φῶς, καὶ μέλατος ἀγκόλου γλυκερώτερον ἀνδράσι χάρμα ἐκπροχέει, ἦτο’ τοὺ’ <δῆ> δεῖ μόνῳ αὐγένα κάμπτεν καὶ τρίβουν αἰώνεσιν ἐν εὐσεβείᾳ ἀνακλύνοις’ν’).

35 γλυκερόν Opsopoeus (1599) = Or. Sib. III. 746; Odyssey 20. 69; 24. 68.

(41) II. 38. 7. Τοίνυν Σίβυλλα καὶ οἱ λουτοὶ προφήται, ἀλλὰ μην καὶ οἱ ποιηταὶ καὶ φιλόσοφοι καὶ αὐτοὶ δεδηλώκασαν περὶ δικαιοσύνης καὶ κρίσεως καὶ κολάσεως ἐτι μην καὶ περὶ προνοίας, ἦτοι φροντίζει δ’ θεὸς οὗ μόνου περὶ τῶν ζώντων ἡμῶν ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν πεθευόμενων, καίπερ ἀκοντες (Humphry, 1852: ἀπαντες Ven.) ἐφασαν ἥλεγχυση γὰρ ὑπὸ τῆς ἀληθείας. Read: ἦτι μην καὶ περὶ προνοιας, ἕτοι φροντίζει ὁ θεός οὐ μόνον περὶ τῶν ζωντών {ήμων} ἀλλὰ καὶ τῶν τεθνεώτων, καίπερ ὧν ἀπαντεῖ, ἐφασαν.

II. 38. 34. Πειράθητι οὖν πυκνότερον συμβαλεῖν, ὡσπον καὶ ζωῆς ἀκούσας φωνῆς ἀκριβῶς μάθης τάλθης. Read: συμβαλεῖν ἧμῖν ἀπὸ τοῦ and compare III. 1. 6 ἦμῖν δὲ συμβαλῶν ἔτη λήφων ἄγη...}

(42) III. 7. 5. Πυθαγόρας δὲ, τοσούτα μοχθῆσας περὶ θεῶν καὶ τὴν ἄνω κατά πορείαν ποιησάμενος, ἐσχάτων ὁρίζει φύσιν καὶ αὐτοματισμὸν εἶναι φησιν τῶν πάντων· θεοὺς ἀνθρώπων μηδὲν φροντίζειν. Read: ἐσχάτων ὁρίζει φύσιν ἀτίδιον καὶ αὐτοματισμὸν εἶναι φησιν τῶν πάντων, θεοὺς ἀνθρώπων μηδὲν φροντίζειν and compare II. II. 4. 3 Ἐτέροι δὲ φασίν αὐτοματισμὸν τῶν πάντων ἄνω, καὶ τὸν κόσμον ἄγένητον καὶ φύσιν ἀτίδιον, καὶ τὸ σύνολον πρόωνι μέν εἶναι θεῖο ἐτόλμησαν ἐξειπτεῖν. II. 8. 9 καὶ οἱ μὲν ἄγένητον αὐτὸν (sc. τοῦ κόσμου) καὶ ἀτίδιον φύσιν φάκοντες... III. 26. 20 Οὐδέν ἄγένητος ὁ κόσμος ἄνω καὶ αὐτοματισμὸς τῶν πάντων, καθώς Πυθαγόρας καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ πεφυλακησαν, ἀλλὰ μὲν οὐν γεννητός καὶ προνοία διωκεῖται ὑπὸ τοῦ πουνάστου τὰ πάντα θεῖο. This φύσις ἀτίδιος of “Pythagoras” is his Monas. Compare Hippolytus, Elenchos I. 2. 2 μονάδα μὲν εἶναι ἀπεφηνατο τὸν θεῶν. Actius I. 7. 18.

(43) III. 7. 28 = A. Meineke, Fr. com. Gr., I (Berlin, 1839), pp. IX f.:

— Θάρσει, βοηθεῖν Πάσι {μὲν} τοῖς ἁξίους εἰσβολήν ὁ θεός, τοῖς δὲ τοιούτοις σφόδρα. εἰ μὴ πάρεσται προεδρία της κυβερνήη tois ζώους ὡς δεῖ, τὶ πλέον εἶστιν εὐσεβεῖν;

5 — Εἴη γὰρ σύνως, ἀλλὰ καὶ λίγῳ ὅρῳ toiv εὐσεβῶς μὲν ἐλομένοις διεξάγειν πράττοντας ἀτόπως, τοὺς δὲ μηδὲν ἔτερον ἥ τὸ λυστελές τὸ κατ‘ αὐτοὺς μόνον, ἐντυμοτέραν ἔχουσε ἤμοις διάθειαν.

10 — Ἐπὶ τοῦ παρόντος· ἀλλὰ δεῖ πόρρω βλέπει καὶ τὴν ἀπάντων ἀναμένειν καταστροφῆν.
οὐχ ὑπὸ τρόπον γὰρ παρ‘ ἐνίοψ ἤσχυεν τἰς dὸξα κακοθῆς τὸ βίω τ‘ ἀνωθελῆς, φορά τὶς ἕστ’ αὐτόματος ἢ βραβεύεται
ὡς ἑτυχε· ταὐτά γὰρ πάντα κρίνουσαν ἔχειν ἐφόδια πρὸς τὸν ἰδίων οἰ φθαίον τρόπων.
ἔστω δὲ καὶ τοῖς ζώους ὡστις προεδρία, καὶ τοῖς πονηροῖς ὡς προσηκ’ ἐπιθυμία· χωρὶς προνοίας γίνεται γὰρ οὐδὲ ἐν.

Read: (1) Line 3 ei μῆ γὰρ ἔσται προεδρία (Meineke) and compare line 17 ἔστω... προεδρία. (2) Line 8 τὸ λυστελές ἀτίδιον τὸ καθ‘ ἕσταν αὐτοὺς μόνον (the infinitive ἀτίδιον depends on line 6 ἐλομένους). (3) Line 9 ἔχουσα (Meineke). (4) Lines 14 f.:

φορά τὶς ἕστ’ αὐτόματος, ἢ βραβεύεται
ὡς ἑτυχε πάντα· ταὐτά γὰρ κρίνουσα· ἔχειν (Grotius). Finally (5), ἐπιθυμία, “desire,” in line 18, is nonsensical. Evidently, read: ἐπιτυμία, “punishment” (Meineke).

(44) III. 7. 50. Τὸν οὖν συνετὸν ἀκροατὴν καὶ ἀναγινώσκοντα προσέχειν ἀκριβῶς τοῖς λεγομένοις δεῖ, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Σιμύλος ἔφη' (Meineke, Fr. com. Gr., I, pp. XIV f.)

Κοινώς ποιητᾶς ἔθος ἐστὶν καλεῖν, καὶ τοὺς περιττοὺς τῇ φύσει καὶ τοὺς κακοὺς' ἐδει δὲ κρίνειν.

καθάπερ ἐν τόπῳ τινὶ (Grant: ἐξ οὗ τινι Venetus) καὶ ὁ Φιλήμων (Fr. 143 Kock)

Χαλεπῶς ἀκροατὴς ἀσύνετος καθήμενος· ὑπὸ γὰρ ἀνοίας οὐχ ἑαυτὸν μέμφεται.

χρῆ οὖν προσέχειν καὶ νοεῖν τὰ λεγόμενα κριτικῶς ἐξετάζοντα τὰ ὑπὸ τῶν φιλοσόφων καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν ποιητῶν εἰρημένα.

First, read: κοινῶς ποιητᾶς <πάντας> ἔθος ἐστὶν καλεῖν (Meineke). Second, the transmitted εξ οὗ τινι cannot yield, palaeographically, ἐν τόπῳ τινι, as Grant prints. Read instead: καθάπερ ἐξουθενεὶ καὶ ὁ Φιλήμων <λέγων>, “as Phileemon too rejects it with contempt while saying.” As for the confusion θ: τ (ἐξουθενεὶ for the transmitted ἐξ οὗ τινι), compare No. 43: ἐπιτυμία for the transmitted ἐπιθυμία. Finally, read the last sentence as follows: ἔπρῃ οὖν <τὸν συνετὸν> προσέχειν καὶ νοεῖν τὰ λεγόμενα, κριτικῶς ἐξετάζοντα τὰ ὑπὸ τῶν φιλοσόφων <καὶ> ποιητῶν καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν εἰρημένα. The words συνετός and ἀσύνετος appear in the context. In addition, compare III. 8. 10 καὶ γὰρ ἰστορούμενα τοῖς συνετοῖς καταγέλαστα φέρει. As for the transposition, compare II. 8. 2 "Ὡςκατὰπάντατρόπον ἐμπαιζόντα οἱ συγγραφεῖς πάντες καὶ ποιηται καὶ φιλόσοφοι λεγόμενοι, ἐτὶ μὴν καὶ οἱ προσέχοντες αὐτοῖς. Π. 3. 36 Ἐλθομεν τούτων ἐπὶ τὰ συγγράμματα τῶν φιλοσόφων καὶ ποιητῶν. In our passage οἱ λοιποί are the historians, οἱ συγγραφεῖς.

(45) III. 14. 1. Καὶ τοῦ μὴ μόνον ἡμᾶς εὐνοεῖν τοῖς ὀμοφύλοις (Clauser, 1546: ἀλοφύλοις Venetus), ὡς οἴσται τινες, Ἡσαίας ὁ προφήτης ἔφη: (follows Isaiah 66:5). Grant translates: "And concerning the good will which we exercise not only toward our own people, as some suppose, Isaiah the prophet said.” But the word order of Greek is strange. Read instead: Καὶ <περὶ> τοῦ μὴ μόνον ἡμῶν ἡμᾶς εὐνοεῖν, ὡς οἴσται τινες, <ἀλλὰ καὶ> τοῖς ἀλ. ὀμοφύλοις. . . . Compare line 10 "Ετὶ μὴν καὶ π ε ρ ἱ τοῦ ὑποτάσσεσθαι. . . .

(46) III. 15. 10. Μακρὰν δὲ ἀπειθὶ χριστιανοῖς ἐνθυμηθῆναι τι τοιοῦτο πράξαι, παρ' οίς σωφροσύνη πάρεστι, ἐγκράτεια ἀσκεῖται, μονογαμία τηρεῖται, ἀγνεία φυλάσσεται, ἀδικία ἐκπροβέβλεται, ἀμαρτία ἐκριζωμένῃ, δικαιοσύνη μελετᾶται, nómος πολιτεύεται, θεοσέβεια πράσεται, θεός ὀμολογεῖται, ἀλήθεια βραβεύει, χάρις συντηρεῖ, εἰρήνη περισκέπτει, λόγος ἄγιος ὅργει, σοφία διδάσκει, ζωὴ βραβεύει, ϊμηρος ὁ θεός ὀυ ἐστι, θεός βασιλεύει. In this elaborate rhetorical enumeration no verb is being repeated except βραβεύει (“truth controls, ... life controls”), which is unlikely. The second βραβεύει is a dittography which had ousted the true reading: ζωὴ βραβεύει, “life triumphs.” Life triumphs through Christ: compare Col. 2:15 βραβεύεσθαι (and, of course, John 14:6).

III. 15. 18...tὰ νῦν αὐτάρκως ηγούμεθα ἐπιμεμνησθαί, εἰς τὸ καὶ σε ἐπιστήσαι μάλιστα ἐξ ἀναγνώσκεις ἐως τοῦ δευδρο, ἦν ὁ φιλομαθὴς ἐγενήθης ἐως τοῦ δευδρο ὡστὸς καὶ φιλομαθὴς ἐστί. Read: εἰς τὸ καὶ σε ἐπιστήσαι μάλιστα ἐξ ἀναγνώσκεις ἐως τοῦ δευδρο, a dittography, ἦν, ὁ φιλομαθὴς ἐγενήθης ἐως τοῦ δευδρο, ὡστὸς καὶ φιλομαθὴς ἐστί.

(47) III. 16. 10. Ἐν γὰρ τοῖς Πολιτείασ αὕτωι (sc. Πλάτωνοι) ἔπιγραφομέναις ῥήτωρ κείται: “Πῶς γὰρ ἀν (Otto: λέγοντος Venetus), εἰ γε ἔμενε τάδε ὡστὸς πάντα χρόνον...” Read: ῥήτωρ κείται λέγοντος: “Πώς, εἰ γε ἔμενε...” Compare Plato, Leg. III, 677 c 7 πῶς γὰρ ἀν, ὡ ἀριστε, εἰ γε ἔμενεν... .

III. 16. 16. Καὶ πολλὰ φήσαι (sc. Πλάτων) περὶ πόλεων καὶ κατοικισμῶν (B. Einaron: κατακοσμῶν καὶ ὀικήσεων Venetus) καὶ έθνῶν, ὀμολογεὶ εἰκασμοὶ τοῦτα εἰρήκενα. Read: περὶ πόλεων καὶ κατοικισμῶν καὶ ὀικήσεων καὶ έθνῶν... . As for κατοικισμῶν, compare Plato, Leg. III, 683 a 4; as for ὀικήσεων, 681 a 7.

(48) III. 18. 12. Ὁ δὲ ἡμέτερος προφήτης καὶ θεράπτων τοῦ θεοῦ Μυσῆς περὶ τῆς γενέσεως τοῦ κόσμου ἐξιστορῶν δηγήσατο τίνι τρόπῳ γεγένητα, ὁ κατακλυσμὸς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ τα τοῦ κατακλυσμοῦ ὃ τρόπῳ γέγονεν... . Read: τίνι τρόπῳ γεγένητα, ὁ κατακλυσμὸς ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ τὸ μετὰ τὸν κατακλυσμὸν ἀρχῆς πάλιν ἐγένετο πόλεως καὶ βασιλείας τὸν τρόπον τοῦτον. III. 23. 20 οὐ μόνον τὰ μετὰ κατακλυσμὸν ἱστοροῦντες, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ πρὸ κατακλυσμοῦ. 24. 9 Μετὰ τὸν κατακλυσμὸν... .

(49) III. 21. 7. Παραγενόμενου γὰρ (sc. οἱ Ἰουδαίοι) εἰς τὴν γῆν τὴν καλουμένην Ἰουδαίαν (Grant: Ἰεροσόλυμα Venetus), ἔνθα καὶ μετὰ κατώκησαν. Read: τὴν γῆν τὴν καλουμένην Ἰσραήλ... ἸΛΛ = Ἰσραήλ was misread by the scribe of the Venetus as ΙΑΗΜ = Ἰεροσόλυμα.

Compare Josephus, c. Αποθέματα γὰρ ἄλληλοις ἀνταπέστελλον λίων κελεύοντες... σαλίσται δὲ μέχρι νῦν παρὰ τοὺς Τυρίων πολλαὶ τῶν ἑπιστολῶν, ὡς εἴκεινοι πρὸς ἄλληλους ἔγραψαι.

(51) III. 23. 10. Ἀλλὰ καὶ οἱ νομοθέται πάντες μεταξὺ εὐρίσκονται νομοθετοῦντες. εἰ γὰρ τις εἰπὼ Σίλωνα τόν Αθηναίον, οὗτος γέγονε... κατὰ τῶν χρόνων Ζαχαρίου τοῦ προερημένου προφήτου, μεταξὺ γεγενημένου (sc. τοῦ Μωσέως) πάνω πολλοῖς ἔτεσιν ἦτοι καὶ περὶ Λυκοῦργον ἦ Δράκαντος ἦ Μίνω τῶν νομοθετῶν, τούτων ἀρχαίατητι (Otto: γράφων λέγει τοῖς Venetus, Bodleianus) προάγονσιν αἱ ιερα βιβλία... Read: ἦτοι καὶ περὶ Λυκοῦργον ἦ Δράκαντος ἦ Μίνω τῶν νομοθετῶν τῶν συγγραφέων λέγοι τις, τῶν πάλιν προάγονσιν αἱ ιερα βιβλία...

(52) III. 23. 19. Ἰνα δὲ ἀκριβεστέραν ποιήσωμεν τὴν ἀπόδειξιν τῶν καραφ καὶ χρόνων, θεοῦ ἡμῖν παρέχοντος οὐ μόνον τὰ μετὰ κατακλυσμὸν ἱστοροῦντες ἄλλα καὶ τὰ πρὸ κατακλυσμοῦ εἰς τὸ καὶ τῶν ἀπάντων κατὰ τὸ δυνατὸν εἰπεὶν ἡμῖν τὸν ἀριθμὸν, νυνὶ ποιησόμεθα, ἀναδραμόμεντες εἰπὶ τὴν ἀνέκαθεν ἀρχὴν τῆς τοῦ κόσμου κτίσεως, ἣν ἀνέγραφεν Μωσῆς ὁ θεράπων τοῦ θεοῦ διὰ πνευματος ἀγίου. Read: εἰς τὸ καὶ τῶν ἀπάντων ἐπὶ τὸ δυνατὸν εἰπεὶν ἡ μᾶς τῶν ἀριθμῶν, τῆς ἀρχῆς νυνὶ ποιησόμεθα ἀναδραμόμεντες εἰπὶ τὴν ἀνέκαθεν ἀρχὴν τῆς τοῦ κόσμου κτίσεως... and compare line 26 ἐσήμανεν (sc. Μωσῆς) καὶ τὰ πρὸ κατακλυσμοῦ ἐτὶ τὴν γενόμενα, line 30 ἀρξομαὶ δὲ πρῶτον ἀπὸ τῶν ἀναγεγραμμένων γενεαλογιῶν, λέγω δὲ ἀπὸ τοῦ πρωτοπλάστου ἀνθρώπου τῇ ἡ ἡ ν ποιησάμενος.

(53) III. 25. 1. Μετὰ δὲ τοὺς κρατὰς ἐγένοντο βασιλεῖς ἐν αὐτοῖς, πρῶτος ὑφάσματι Σαουλ, ὠς ἐβασίλευσεν ἐτή κ’, ἐπείτα Δαυὶδ ὁ πρόγονος ἡμῶν ἐτή μ’. γίνεται οὖν μέχρι τῆς τοῦ Δαυὶδ βασιλείας τὰ πάντα ἐτη υὐη’. Read: γίνεται οὖν ἐπὶ τῆς ἀνέκαθεν πρὸ τῆς Δαυὶδ βασιλείας... “The total from the death of Moses to the reign of David, then, is 498 years.” Compare Theophilus’ Summary, III. 28. 5 Ἀπὸ δὲ τῆς Μωσέως τελευτῆς, ἀρχής Ἰησοῦ νῦν Ναυν, μέχρι τελευτῆς Δαυὶδ τοῦ πατριάρχου ἐτη νη’, and III. 24. 23 φαραώ τοῦ Μωσέως τελευτήσαντος διεδέχατο ἄρχεων Ἰησοῦς νῦν Ναυν, ὃς προέκτη αὐτῶν ἔτεσιν κ’.

(54) III. 26. 1. Ἐντεῦθεν ὡρὰν ἐστὶν πῶς ἀρχαιότερα καὶ ἀληθεστέρα δείκνυται τὰ ἑρᾶ γράμματα τὰ καθ’ ἡμᾶς εἶναι τῶν καθ’ Ἑλλήνας καὶ Αἰγυπτίων, ἢ εἰ καὶ τινὰς ἑτέρους ἱστοριογράφους. ἦτοι γὰρ Ἡρόδοτος καὶ Θουκυδίδης ἢ καὶ Ξενοφῶν ἢ ὅπως οἱ ἄλλοι ἱστοριογράφοι, οἱ πλείον ἢρξαντο σχεδὸν ἀπὸ τῆς Κύρου καὶ Δαρείου βασιλείας ἀναγράφειν... Read: Ξενοφῶν ἢ εἰ; τῶς οἱ ἄλλοι ἱστοριογράφοι καὶ compare ἢ εἰ καὶ τινὰς ἑτέρους ἱστοριογράφους in the context.

(55) III. 27. 36. Ἀπὸ οὖν τῆς Κύρου ἄρχης μέχρι τελευτῆς αὐτοκράτορος Οὐράνου, ὃς προερήκαμεν, ὃ πᾶς χρόνος συνάγεται ἐτῆ ψιμα’. The words ἄρχης μέχρι τελευτῆς are Grant’s emendation: the Venetus has instead: τελευτῆς
"Why" But Poseidon, who or mention Κπι^ιορεπον. Atto... Dionysus who with madman; children while nourished Χοιονον Avοναν. "From the reign of Cyrus [i.e., 28 years] and the reign of Tarquin the Superbus over the Romans [i.e., 25 years] to the death of the already mentioned emperor Verus, the total is 741 years." Compare III. 27. 1–15 and 28. 9 f.

Appendix: ΑΘΗΝΑ ΦΙΛΟΚΟΛΠΟΣ (III. 3. 22)

(1) After condemning Greek gods (Cronos for devouring his own children, his son Zeus for swallowing his wife Metis, Hera for marrying her own brother, etc.), Theophilus concludes (III. 3. 21): “But why should I go on listing the stories about Poseidon and Apollo, or about Dionysus and Heracles, or about the φιλόκολπος Athena and the shameless Aphrodite, when we have already given a more precise account of them in another place?” Τί μοι λοιπὸν καταλέγειν τὰ περὶ Ποσειδώνας καὶ Ἀπάλλωνος, ἡ Διονύσου καὶ Ἡρακλέους, ἡ Ἀθηνᾶς τῆς φιλοκόλπου καὶ Ἀφροδίτης τῆς ἀναισχύντων, ἀκριβεστέρον πεποιηκότων ἡμῶν ἐν ἑτέρῳ τῶν περὶ αὐτῶν λόγῳ;

The other place is I. 9. There the mention is made of Cronos the consumer of his own children, and of Zeus who slew the very goat which nourished him, only to make himself a garment; who engaged in incest, adultery, and pederasty. Then Theophilus uses the same rhetorical device while asking: “But why should I go on listing the stories about his (Zeus’) children: Heracles who burned himself up; Dionysus the drunkard and madman; Apollo who feared Achilles and took flight; who fell in love with Daphne, and was ignorant of the fate of Hyacinthus; or Aphrodite who was wounded, and Ares, ‘the plague of men’?” (I. 9. 9). In addition, Poseidon is rebuked at II. 7. 1: “Why should I mention the Greek myths... Poseidon submerging under the sea, and embracing Melanippe, and begetting a cannibal son...?"

Consequently, Athena ἡ φιλόκολπος and Aphrodite ἡ ἀναισχύντος (from III. 3. 22) are mentioned nowhere else. Now, it is not difficult to see why Aphrodite could be called “shameless, impudent:” she, a married woman, was caught with Ares in flagranti delicto (Odyssey 8. 266–366; compare especially 269 f. λέχος δ’ ἕσχυνε καὶ εἴδην ἠ Ἡφαίστου ἄνακτος). But what is the meaning of Athena’s derogatory epithet—and hapax legomenon—φιλόκολπος?

(2) ΦΙΛΟΚΟΛΠΟΣ. (a) The translation Minerva sinus amans persists since the editio princeps of Theophilus (by Joannes Frisius, Zurich, 1546; Latin version by Conrad Clauser). It stands in the important edition of
J. C. Wolf (Hamburg, 1724), and J. C. T. Otto, in his critical edition (Jena, 1861) comments: “nimimum epitheton φιλοκόλπωσ (sinum amantis) egregie quadrat ad impudicitiam (paullo supra: πορνείας καὶ μοιχείας), de qua sermo est.” This interpretation, however, must be discarded. First, why the epithet “bosom-loving” should imply impudence or be derogatory? Second, what has “fornication and adultery” to do with the image of Athena, the παρθένος αἰδοίῃ (Hymn. Hom. 28.3), par excellence?

(b) A. Ardizzoni\(^1\) was right when rejecting the sense “bosom” of κόλπος (LSJ, I. 1) in φιλόκολπος. But his own interpretation, built upon LSJ, s.v., II, “fold of garment,” is no better. According to Ardizzoni, Theophilos has in mind the standard statue of Athena Promachos (at I. 10. 6 Phidias’ Athena on the Acropolis is mentioned), with her typical dress falling in many and deep folds (cf. βαθύκολπος). Athena is then being criticized for her fashionable and elegant garment. And Ardizzoni concludes: “In fondo, per un intransigente cristiano dei primi secoli, anche la tendenza a vestire con raffinata eleganza poteva costituire una macchia” (p. 104). But, again, to be an “amante delle vesti dalle ampie pieghe” (φιλόκολπος) need not imply “moral fault,” nor is it characteristic for Athena’s way of dressing only.

(c) In his turn, A. Barigazzi\(^2\) keeps the sense suggested by Ardizzoni but gives it a strange twist: Theophilos uses here an ironical sneer while hinting at Athena’s loss of virginity, according to the myth of Athena as mother of Apollo by Hephaestus (Cicero De natura deor. 3. 55 and 59; Arnobius 4. 14; Clement Protrept. II. 28. 2). Barigazzi then concludes: “... anche Atena, che è sempre ben coperta perché gelosa del suo pudore, è vituperabile come la svergognata Afrodite; non è vero che sia rimasta vergine” (p. 381). This interpretation, too, must be dismissed, for the simple reason that φιλόκολπος, in the sense of “loving her garment’s folds,” cannot imply that much as ἐνταῦθα δῆ οὐκέτι παρθένος ἡ Ἀθηνᾶ (as Clement has it).

(d) In a more recent article, M. B. Keary\(^3\) chooses the sense of LSJ, I. 2: membrum muliebre, esp. vagina; sinus genitalis, womb (which was mentioned but discarded by Ardizzoni, p. 100), reinterpreting Barigazzi’s hint at Athena’s loss of virginity. According to the myth of the birth of Erich-thonius (Apollodorus Bibli. III. 14. 6), Athena succeeds in defending her virginity against Hephaestus’ advances, and Erichthonius is born from Hephaestus’ seed fallen to the ground. Hence, believes Keary, \( \phi i l o k o l \phi \sigma o s \) “means something like ‘caring for (cherishing, holding dear, protecting)’ her κόλπος (sense I. 2)” and that it refers to the Athena-Hephaestus-Erichthonius myth” (p. 100).

---

Keary does not seem to be aware of the fact that already Tatian (Oratio ad Graecos 8) had used the Hephaestus myth against Athena. However, his interpretation must be rejected on the ground that \( \phi i l o - \) cannot yield the sense “caring for,” “protecting,” but only “loving, being fond of.” Out of over 800 compounds with the first member \( \phi i l o - \), there is no one single example of such a meaning, the basic sense being always: “\( q u i \) aliquid (or aliquid) amat,” “-süchtig, -gierig, -lustig, -freundlich, liebend, gern, geneigt, begehrend,” as M. Landfester\(^4\) has well pointed out.

(3) \( \Phi I L O P I L E M O S \). Consequently, as \( \phi i l o k o l \phi \sigma o s \) cannot give a satisfactory sense it seems preferable to consider it a textual corruption. Apparently, the first to do so was J. H. Nolte,\(^5\) who in 1856 conjectured \( \phi i l o p o l \epsilon \mu o u \) instead. His conjecture, however, cannot be palaeographically explained and must be dismissed. Unfortunately, it still lives in Jean Sender’s \textit{en face} translation (“Athéna la belliqueuse”) to Gustave Bardy’s Greek text (where, however, \( \phi i l o k o l \phi \sigma o u \) is kept).\(^6\)

(4) \( \Phi I L O M O L I P O S \). M for K has been suggested first by Gb. Galliccioli, in 1804,\(^7\) then (independently) by W. H. Roscher,\(^8\) with reference to Nonnus Dionys. 24. 36 \( \phi i l o m o l \phi \sigma o s \) Athημη.\(^9\) Unaware of Roscher’s reference, E. Degani\(^10\) repeated it in 1964, while supporting Galliccioli’s \( \phi i l o m o l \phi \sigma o u \) by other references to Athena as patroness of singing, dancing and music (compare \( \Pi a l l \lambda \delta a \ \tau \epsilon \nu \) \( \phi i l o \chi o r o u \) at Aristophanes Thesm. 1136).

\(^6\) \textit{Théophile d’ Antioche, Trois livres à Autolycus}. Texte grec et introduction de Gustave Bardy, traduction de Jean Sender (Sources Chrétienes, 20, Paris, 1948).

\(^7\) \textit{Teofilo, Libri tre ad Autolico}. Trad. di Gb. Galliccioli (Venice, 1804), 183. Quoted by Enzo Degani (infra, note 10), 93.

\(^8\) In O. Gross, \textit{Die Gotteslehre des Theophilus von Antiocheia} (Chemnitz, 1896), 8. Quoted by R. M. Grant (infra, note 11), 158.

\(^9\) Earlier instances of \( \phi i l o m o l \phi \sigma o s \) are: Stesichor. 16.10 Page; Pindar \textit{Nem.} 7.9; Callimachus \textit{In Delum} 197. Cf. \( \phi i l o m o l \phi \sigma o s \) at Pindar \textit{Ol.} 14.14 and Landfester (supra, note 4), 123 and 129–131.

Finally, Robert M. Grant, who earlier retained φιλοκόλπος,11 prints φιλομόλπος in his Oxford edition of Theophilus (1970), with reference to Roscher (in lieu of Galliccioli), while translating “the dance-loving Athena.” Here, again, I am at a loss to see how Athena’s epithet φιλόμολπος, “dance-loving,” could yield a derogatory sense required by the entire context.12

(5) ΦΙΛΟΚΟΜΠΙΟΣ. That is why I would like to suggest the reading φιλοκόμπος, “boastful, vaunting, ostentatious, arrogant.” The confusion of the uncial A and M (after some fading of the ink) seems to be likely enough (cf., e.g., Aeschylus Eum. 881 καμούμαι M: καλούμαι F Tri). The word φιλόκομπος is not listed in LSJ (it is missing in E. A. Barber’s Supplement of 1968, too), but it does exist in G. W. H. Lampe’s Patristic Greek Lexicon. It is used by Justin the Martyr (ob. ca. A.D. 165; Theophilus writes post a.d. 180) at 2 Apol. 3.1, then by Cyril of Alexandria (Habacuc 8:3, p. 523 E ed. J. Aubert). In addition, υπέρκομπος occurs in Aeschylus Persae 827 and 831; Septem 391 and 404; ψιφικόμπος in Sophocles Ajax 766; κομπός in Euripides Phoenissae 600, etc.

Now, why Theophilus should have censured Athena as “vaunting, arrogant”? Because the Apologists were fond of dismissing Athena on the ground of her role as warrior: the place of a woman is in house, not on battlefield. So Tatian (ob. post a.d. 172) rejects Athena as ἀνθρωποκτόνος καὶ πολεμοποιός, along with Aphrodite as γάμου πλοκαίς ἕδεται (Oratio ad Graecos 8. 3). In his turn, Ps.-Justin writes (Oratio ad Graecos 2):13 Ἄθηνας γὰρ τὸ ἀνδρόκόντον καὶ Διονύσου τὸ θηλυκόν, καὶ Ἀφροδίτης τὸ πορνικόν. Ἀνάγνωστε τῷ Δίῳ, ἄνδρες Ἔλληνες, τὸν κατὰ πατριαλών νόμον, καὶ τὸ μοιχείας πρόστιμον, καὶ τὴν παιδερασίας σιάχροτηγα. Διδάξατε Ἀθηνᾶς γὰρ καὶ Ἀρτέμιδος τὰ τῶν γυναικῶν ἔργα καὶ Διόνυσον τὰ ἀνδρῶν. Τί σε μονὸν ἐπιδεικνύεται γυνὴ ἡ ἐπὶ λοίς κεκοσμημενή, ἄνηρ δὲ κυβαλίδω καὶ στέμμασι καὶ θυρεῖ γυναικεῖα καλλωπιζόμενο, καὶ ὀργίων τού ἐγκλῆ γυναικῶν;

In conclusion, in calling Athena φιλοκόμπος Theophilus only follows the established apologetic practice. Probably, he was inspired by such Homeric passages about the mannish “vaunting” Athena as this one (Iliad 21. 408–411). After smiting and felling Ares, Athena breaks into a 12 Contra, e.g., Degani’s reference to Tertullian De spect. 10.8 f.: Quae vero voce et modis et organis et litteris transiguntur, Apollines et Musas et Minervas et Mercurios mancipes habent. Oderis, christianae, quorum auctores non potes non odisse.

laugh, and vaunting and exulting over him (καὶ οἱ ἐπευχομένη) she says: “You fool, not even yet have you learnt how much superior to you I avow me to be, that you dare match your strength with mine!” No wonder then that Ares should complain to Zeus about Athena as “that mad and baneful maid” (ἀφρονε κοῦρην | οὐλομένην, Iliad 5. 875 f.).

University of Illinois at Urbana
The \textit{v}-Recension of St. Cyril's Lexicon

\textit{†MARK NAOMIDES}

It has become an axiom of modern scholarship that a thorough investigation into the history of the transmission is a necessary prerequisite for a truly critical edition of a text. The present study will, it is hoped, illustrate this point adequately. For although A. B. Drachmann's \textit{Überlieferung des Cyrillglossars}\textsuperscript{1} was a pioneer work for the manuscript tradition of St. Cyril's Lexicon, it fell short of the basic goal of any such study: that of determining as closely as possible the history of the transmission and of setting forth, as clearly and indisputably as possible, the method of a future edition. Drachmann's work suffers primarily from his predilection for old manuscripts\textsuperscript{2} and arbitrary elimination of many good witnesses of the tradition; from lack of clear and rigorous criteria in determining relationship of mss., families, and recensions; and to a lesser degree from an apparent hopelessness, shared by many others before and after him, when confronted with the almost infinite variations which the mss. present. It is hoped that the present study, a part of a general investigation into all known mss. of the Lexicon, will afford a better and more secure basis for the solution of the problem of relationship of the mss., and eventually of the extant recensions. The conclusions arrived at are based on (a) an exhaustive codicological study of all the witnesses of our tradition, however late; and (b) a minute analysis of \textit{Stichproben} taken from three different parts of the Lexicon ($\theta$, $\xi$, $\chi$). Because of space limitations, some details have been deliberately omitted. I reserve them for my forthcoming study of the entire tradition.

\textsuperscript{1} Det Kgl. Danske Videnskabernes Selskab. Historisk-filologiske Meddelelser. XXI.5 (Copenhagen, 1936), henceforth referred to simply as Drachmann.

\textsuperscript{2} Drachmann also had the tendency to misdate some of his mss. Thus he assigned F to the X s. and J (dated in the year 1317) to the XI–XII s. Conversely he dated S (a ms. written ca. 1000) in the XIII s.
LIST OF THE MANUSCRIPTS OF THE RECENSION

B = Vatican, Bibl. Apost. Vaticana, gr. 2130. Vellum, 276 (-280) × 216 mm., vii + 285 fols. Early XII s. Contents a'–d', description of contents by Jo. Pastritius in 1694; f–g, two letters (dated 6 and 27 April 1688) on the sale of the ms. by a certain Antonio Bulifone to Mons. Giovanni Ciampini; 6 1'–154', St. Cyril's lexicon; 154'–218', 236'–256', minor lexica; 7 219'–236', metrologia; 256–278', 282'–285', Theodosius Grammaticus, Commentary on canons (hymns); 8 279'–282', treatise on breathing marks. The codex

4 The last seven folios (paper, XV s.) were added to replace the missing end of the volume. Two folios are missing from the main body of the ms., one after fol. 7 (the last of quire a, replaced with a seemingly blank vellum leaf), and one between 199–200 (the last of quire kē). The last two quires have been bound in reverse order and some of their leaves are misplaced, the proper order being 261–263, 272–276, 264, 277, 278, 265–271.

5 Giov. Pastrizio († 1708), Theology Lecturer in the Collegio Urbano de Propaganda Fide. Autobiographical notes and lists of his books have been preserved in the following ms. of the Vatican Library: Borg. lat. 62, 475, 480, 746.

7 On these minor lexica which in our mss. commonly follow St. Cyril's Lexicon cf. Drachmann, 53–58. See also my edition of the Ἐρημορφοὶ Λέξεις (above, note 3), 26 f.

bears numerous marginal notes in the Sicilian dialect, but written in Greek characters, which together with the inclusion among the lexica minora of a lexicon to the life of St. Elias the Younger, testify to the S. Italian—Sicilian origin of this ms. Fols. 1r and 285v bear the ex-libris of Jerónimo Zurita. Schow and Schmidt refer to it as “codex Caitani Marini”. For pertinent bibliography cf. Canart-Peri, 687; Naoumides, “Symmeikta,” 374; Rhet. Lex., 9–11.

Ba = Eton College, cod. 86 (formerly Bk. 6.13; cf. James, p. 29). Paper, 270 × 197 mm., ii + 97 fols. (unnumbered). Contents: St. Cyril’s lexicon. According to a note on one of the fly leaves this codex was copied in 1689 (not in 1679, as James has it), “ex codice ms. in Bibliotheca I II ml et Rev ml D(omi)ni Joannis Ciampini Romae . . .” An even cursory comparison with B plainly confirms this. It is noteworthy that the original fol. 8 was already missing from B when the copy was made. The ms. once belonged to E. Betham who donated it to Eton College in 1775.

C = Grottaferrata, ms. Z. α, XXX (Rocchi, 458–459). Vellum of very poor quality, 200 × 160 mm., 115 fols. Early XII s. Contents: 1r–70r, St. Cyril’s lexicon with the beginning missing; 70r-end, minor lexica and metrologica, as in B. Illumination and extensive 12 I am grateful to Mr. P. L. Strong, Keeper of the Eton College Library and Collections, for sending me a copy of the above note and for informing me that the donor’s note is by the hand of Betham himself.

13 Fols. 2 and 3 have erroneously been bound there in place of some of the missing leaves of the quire, which was the second of the original volume. One folio is missing between fols. 38–39, with the beginning of the λ-section. Only one folio remains from the last preserved quire. Fols. 96–98 have been bound upside down and in reverse order.

14 Rocchi erroneously dated the ms. in the year 991. On the date of the vi archetypic cf. below.
use of green and yellow ink wash over initials and titles betray S. Italian provenance. The ms. bears corrections by a later hand.

G = Cephallenia, Movr' Ay. Герасιμов, No. 3 (Lambros, 389). Vellum, 230 × 188 (–190) mm., 106 fols.¹⁶ Early XII s., by a hand closely resembling that of F and H. Contents: 1⁵–75⁵, St. Cyril’s lexicon with the beginning missing; 75⁵-end, minor lexica. In the margins and the last two fols. there are several signatures, some of whom at least may have been past owners or may have been affiliated with monasteries which possessed the ms. Some of the surnames are clearly Cephallenian. Bibliography: Drachmann, 8 f.; Benediktsson, 247; Naoumides, “Symmeikta,” 374; Rhet. Lex., 12.

¹⁵ The first and last folios of quire 1 are missing. Also one folio between 54–55, another between 60–61 (the first and last of quire 7); two between 139–140 (the last of quire 17 and the first of 18), four between 140–141 (i.e., from the middle of quire 18), eight between 149–150 (the last of 17 and the first seven of 18), four between 152–153 (middle of 19), one between 162–163, and another between 168–169 (first and last of 20). The last preserved quire (20) has at present only three fols. but no visible lacuna.

¹⁶ The first three quires and an undetermined number from the end are missing. The last two fols. are mere fly leaves.

17 Four leaves have been cut off between fols. 183–184 containing, as it appears, Easter Tables to the year 6862 (= 1354); cf. my article “The Date, Scribe and Provenience of Cod. Holkham Gr. 112 (olim 298)”, Scriptorium 28, 1974, 65–68.
18 I.e., between the date of the archetype and that of F, an apographe of H (cf. below).
19 Miss Barbour, however, considers fols. 229–230 as written by another hand. In my opinion the difference in appearance between the two “hands” is due to the poor quality of thevellum of fols. 229–230 and to the fact that they are badly wrinkled. See also my article cited above (note 17).
20 Actually 92, since there are two folios numbered 5 (i.e., 5 and 5bis).
21 Some leaves of quire τ have been bound in wrong order, the proper order being 32, 34, 35, 33, 38, 36, 37, 39.
K = Paris, Bibl. Nat., suppl. grec 1146 (Omont, III, 387; Astruc—Concasty, 294—296). Paper, 199 × 145 mm., 189 fols. Written in Jerusalem in 1562 (cf. fol. 175v). Contents: 1r—v, didactic verses mixed with prose in vulgar Greek, written by a XVII s. hand (probably that of Christopher Stroagia, according to Concasty); 2r—34v, ἐπίμνεια of three canons by St. John of Damascus; 35r—81v, minor lexica; 82r—175r, St. Cyril's lexicon; 175r—181r, Dionysius Thrax, Ars grammatica; 182r—187v, lexicographical excerpts. Former owners: Hieromonk Dionysius, hieromonk Christopher Stroagia of Corfou (cf. fol. 26r), the deacon Daniel, son of Nicholas, also of Corfou (fol. 188r), hieromonk Dionysius of Crete (1782; cf. fol. 187v). It was bought by Al. Sorlin Dorigny from the book-dealer Rigopoulos at Constantinople in 1894 (cf. fol. 26v). Bibliography: Naoumides, Rhet, Lex., 14.

Ka = Bucharest, Bibl. Akadem. Romane, gr. 612 (Litzica, 305). Paper, 21 × 15 cm., 225 fols. Written in the monastery of St. Anastasia near Sozopolis (Sozopol) by the priest Gabriel on 18 December, 1625 (cf. fol. 219v). Contents: 1r—v, 226r—225v and passim, Greek—Rumanian lexicon; 2r—9v, Disticha Catonis translated by M. Planudes; 10r—18r, Pseudo-Phocylidea; 18r—48r, Hesiod, Erga with interlinear and marginal interpretation; 49r—77r, Aphthonius, Progymnasmata; 82r—217r, St. Cyril's lexicon with the same beginning as in K; 217r—219r, lexicon of plants. On some pages, left blank by the original scribe, a later hand wrote a poem in political verse.

22 One folio is missing between 49—50 and another between 55—56. The next-to-last quire is complete but the text clearly continued beyond. The last quire is written by a different hand on paper with different watermarks from the rest of the volume and comes from another ms.

23 The Lexicon begins with the introductory note Δεῖ εἰδέναι found in Hesychius and Par. gr. 2655 and other mss. (cf. Drachmann, 17—18, Latte, xiii). This admonition is a feature of the 1t family of the shorter version of Pseudo-Zonaras' Lexicon; cf. my article, cited below, on ms. Q. The interpolation is limited to the beginning of the Lexicon.

24 The scribe's name written as a monogram in a dodecsyllabic line at the end of the subscription: ἡ βεβεβεβεβεβ εἰς ἰδίων Γαβρηλ θ(ὁ)τ(ου) π(δ)ν(ας), was overlooked by Litzica.

25 The Lexicon was apparently written independently from the rest, since the quires containing it bear a separate numbering.

26 This note is confirmed by a letter written by the Marquis of Villeneuve, French

M = Vatican, Bibl. Apost. Vaticana, gr. 2164. Paper, 332 × 230 mm., iv + 126 fols. To judge from the watermarks (Briquet 492, 13888), the ms. was written probably in Italy, in the XVI s. Contents: 1r–73r, St. Cyril’s lexicon; 74r–117r, voces hebraicae; 119r–v, metrologica. The ms. was one of the “codices Columnnenses” sold in Rome in December, 1820. Bibliography: Drachman, 21; Canart–Peri, 689.

O = Paris, Bibl. Nat., suppl. grec 659 (Omont, III, 291 f.). This ms. consists of three parts (1–150, 151–169, 170–185) of which only the first interests us here. Vellum, 142 × 110 mm., XIII s.

 ambassador in Constantinople, to the count of Maurepas, dated October 28, 1734; cf. H. Omont, Missions archéologiques françaises en Orient aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles, II (Paris, 1902), 681–683. The Prince of Moldavia referred to is Constantine Maurokordatos, son of Nicholas Maurokordatos, Prince of Wallachia. For the attempts of the French to acquire the library of Nicholas and (after his death) Constantine M., see Omont, op. cit., passim.

27 Fols. 120–126 are blank. There are two folios numbered 117 (117a and 117b).

29 Probably a whole quire is missing from the beginning. In the midst of the 8-section (fol. 11v) a number of glosses beginning with & appear. They properly belong to the Lexicon Octateuchi (fol. 79r), as the rubricator has rightly remarked in the margin. There was apparently a misplaced folio in N’s exemplar.

R = Oxford, Bodleian Library, ms. Gr. class. f. 114. Vellum, 165 x 137 mm., vii + 228 fols.32 XI s. Contents: 1r–93v, St. Cyril’s lexicon with the beginning missing; 94r–154v, Homeric lexicon similar to the one found in SU and published in part by V. de Marco33; 154v–end, minor lexica. In the lower margin of fol. 1r, illegible signature, apparently of a former owner. The ms. betrays 32 Fols. 215–228 are mere fly-leaves. The first two quires and the first leaf of quire 7 are missing. Also one leaf between fols. 6–7. The proper order of the folios from 199 to 214 is: 199, 208–213, 206, 207, 200–205, 214, i.e., the inside leaves of quires 67, 87 have been transposed mutually.

S = Selestat, Bibl. municipale, cod. 105 (Michelant, 593). Vellum, 170 × 135 (−140) mm., 183 fols. Written ca. 1000, probably in S. Italy. Contents: 3°−81°, St. Cyril's lexicon; 81°−96°, 134°−158°, 162°−169°, minor lexica; 97°−134°, Homeric lexicon; 159°−160°, Theodosius Grammaticus, Commentary on canons (with the end missing); 161°−9, grammatical fragment; 170°−end, Ps.-Nonnus, Interpretatio historiarum Gregorii Nazianzeni. In the upper margin of fol. 5° the familiar ex-libris of Beatus Rhenanus. A note written at the end of St. Cyril's lexicon (fol. 81°) states that the ms. was corrected by J. Conon of Nuremberg at Padua in 1501. Bibliography: Drachmann, 15; V. de Marco, op. cit. (above, note 33), vii ff.; P. Adam, op. cit. (above, note 35), 112 f. and Plate viii; Pertusi, Leonzio Pilato, 483, and note 1; idem "Aspetti organizzativi," 418 and n. 3; idem "Leonzio Pilato e la tradizione di cultura Italo-Greca," Byzantino-Sicula, Quaderni, 2, Palermo, 1966, 77; Naoumides, Rhet. Lex., 15.

---

34 Fols. 1, 2, 183 are mere fly-leaves. Fols. 157−161 should be placed after fol. 169. Three folios are missing after 160, and at least one between 176−177.

35 "sum Beati Rhenani nec muto dominum. Basileae MDXIII." This is therefore one of the mss. which he inherited from J. Conon, upon the latter's death on 21 February 1513. On B. Rhenanus, his friendship with Conon, and his library, cf. P. Adam, L'humanisme a Sélèstat (Sélestat, 1962) and the bibliography cited there.

36 One folio is missing between 1−2 and another between 5−6.

W = Florence, Bibl. Laurenz., plut. 57.50 (Bandini, II, 431-433). Paper, 207 (–220) x 147 mm., 599 fols.,41 year 1515 (cf. fol. 591v). Contents: i₉–456v, St. Cyril's lexicon with the title Συναγωγή λέξεων συνελεύσαντι ἐκ διαφόρων βιβλίων παλαιῶς τέ φημι γρα(φης) καὶ τῆς νέως;42 457r–478v, minor lexica; 479r–574v, commentary on canons by St. John of Damascus and Cosmas Maiuma, with the beginning and end missing; 575r–578v, iambic and anacreonic poems with alphabetic acrostic; 578v–594v, varia opuscula astronomica et grammatica; 595v–598v, Funeral oration for Catherine († 1462), wife of Thomas Palaeologus, by Charitonymus Hermymynus.

X = Mt. Athos, M. Βατοπεδίου, cod. 418 (Eustratiades–Arcadios, 81).

---

37 Single folios are missing between 19–20, 41–42, 116–117, 191–192. Since there is no lacuna in the corresponding sections in Va, these fols. must have been lost after the copying of Va or its immediate ancestor.

39 There is no fol. 41, however. Fols. 142v–143r are left blank, apparently to indicate a lacuna in the exemplar. Another hand subsequently wrote the credo in Greek on 142v. The drawing of a bearded man with the title ὁ ταπεινὸς ἐπίσκοπος καὶ ναυ(?) καὶ αὐθεν(τῆς ?) fills the other blank page.

40 On Altaemps cf. C. Frati, op. cit. (above, note 11), 16 f.

41 With the new numbering of folios. Some folios are missing between 478–479 and 574–575. Fols. 498, 588v, 592, 593, 598v, 599 are blank. Fols. 595v–598v are written by another hand.

42 This is the title of Ps.–Zonaras' Lexicon. The ms. indeed has many marginalia from Ps.–Zonaras. On account of its title Tittmann (Joannis Zonorae Lexicon . . . , Leipzig, 1808, p. xlii) listed it among the mss. of Ps.–Zonaras.
Vellum, 152 × 115 mm., 63 fols., XIII s. (X s., according to Eustratiades). Contents: St. Cyril’s lexicon with the beginning and end missing.

Y = Athens, Βοξ. Μουσείου, cod. 186 (Pallas, 77–79). The main part of the ms. (fols. 1, 44–45, 56–134, 147) was written on vellum in 1296–1297 and belongs to the g-recension. Fols. 2–43, 46–53 (containing the missing part of St. Cyril’s lexicon) were copied on paper from a ms. of the v-recension in the XVII s. The same hand also copied fols. 136–146. The ms. formerly belonged to the Monastery (of the Transfiguration) τοῦ Μετεώρου (cf. fol. 2v).

Z = Grottaferrata, Z.a, VI (Rocchi, 444). Vellum, 21 × 16 cm., 42 fols., XIII s. Contents: St. Cyril’s Lexicon with the beginning and end missing. In the right-hand margins a contemporary hand added further explanations. This ms. was in all probability written in S. Italy. Marginal notes in fol. 16v and 32v testify that it once belonged to the Monastery of St. Mary “del Patir”. Bibliography: A. Batiffol, L’ Abbaye de Rossano: Contribution à l’histoire de la Vaticane (Paris, 1891), 60; A. Rocchi, op. cit., 280; Pertusi, Leonzio Pilato, 484 and n.1; idem, “Aspetti organizzativi,” 419 and n.3; idem, “Leonzio Pilato,” 77.

43 The first five quires, the last folio of quire 1β together with quire 1γ (between fols. 55–56), and an undetermined number of quires after fol. 63 are missing.

44 Six complete quires are missing from the beginning, two more between fols. 32–33, and an undetermined number from the end.

45 As can be inferred from the writing, quality of vellum, rubrication, and extensive use of yellow ink wash.
\[ \Theta = \text{Munich, Bayer. Staatsbibl., gr. 298 (Hardt, III, 231). Vellum, 185 (–189) \times 138 (–140) mm., ii + 138 fols. Written in the XII s., probably in S. Italy. Contents: St. Cyril's lexicon with the end missing. Bibliography: Drachmann, 20; Naoumides, "Symmeikta," 376.} \]

\[ \Lambda = \text{Mt. Athos, M. Μεγίστης Λαύρας, 20 (Spyridon Lavriotes–Eustatiades, p. 33, No. 260). Vellum, 19 \times 13 cm., 224 fols., XIV s. Contents: 1\(^{st}\)–10\(^{th}\), fragment of a lexicon; 11\(^{st}\)–179\(^{th}\), St. Cyril's lexicon; 179\(^{th}\) ταυτολεξία; 181\(^{st}\)–end, ὅροι καὶ ύπογραφαί κατὰ στοιχεῖα.} \]

\[ \Sigma = \text{Munich, Bayer. Staatsbibl., gr. 230 (Hardt, II, 497; 502). Paper (oriental), 244 (–248) \times 170 mm., 314 fols. Written in the XIII s., in part διὰ χειρὸς Νίφωνος (μον)αξ(ο) (cf. fol. 291\(^{st}\) and 311\(^{st}\)). Contents: 1\(^{st}\)–246\(^{th}\), St. Cyril's lexicon; 246\(^{th}\)–286\(^{th}\), minor lexica; 286\(^{th}\)–end, varia grammatica, theologica, etc. The following note appears in the margin of fol. 197\(^{st}\): ἡ τῆς βῆλη | βλος πέλει | κουνταντί | νου ἵμβρι | ὄντω καὶ ὢ | πουργοῦ τοῦ | ξενώνος | τοῦ κράτους. Bibliography: Vogel-Gardthausen, 334; Drachmann, 20.} \]

46 The date σκα′ (1212–1213), which appears in fly-leaf ii\(^{th}\), is by another hand and need not be the date of the ms.

47 This is inferred from the writing, illumination, and quality of the vellum. Note also the following notes by a XIII s. hand: Νός ρύβουλοι αὐτοὺς ἄφονε μέγρα γρε (fol. ii\(^{th}\)), γεβδομή καὶ τόσον σύστημα (fol. 38\(^{th}\)).

48 One folio is missing between 223–224 and one from the last quire of the volume (κ′). The first ten folios come from another ms., since the numbering of the quires begins with fol. 11.

49 The arrangement is basically alphabetical, but the order of the larger sections seems disturbed (N, Σ, O, M, N, Λ, M, E).

50 One folio is missing between 2–3, and an undetermined number from the end.

51 Numbered 1–311, but there are two extra folios (numbered 3\(^{a}\), 3\(^{b}\)), and a third unnumbered folio between 126–127.

52 To judge from the position and phrasing of the subscription, Niphon wrote fols. 1–12 and 291–311. Note that the main body of the ms. begins with a quire marked \( \ddot{B} \), i.e., Niphon apparently supplemented the missing beginning and end of the volume.

53 On the ξενών τοῦ κράτους situated near the Blachernae Palace in Constantinople, cf. A. Premerstein in the preface of the facsimile edition of the Vienna Dioscorides, Codices Φα = Utrecht, Univers. Bibl., cod. 14 (Omont, 209, No. 49). Paper, 212 × 165 mm., 504 pages, XVII s. Contents: St. Cyril's lexicon. This is clearly an apograph of Φ.

Ω = Vatican, Bibl. Apost. Vaticana, gr. 869. This is a composite ms., the first part of which (fols. 1–68) is written on oriental paper in the XIII s. and contains the Lexicon of St. Cyril (from α to τ). Fols. 69–82 were added in the XV s. to supplement the missing end of the Lexicon. They also contain a small number of the familiar minor lexica. Bibliography: cf. Canart-Peri, Sussidi, 505.

Three mss. which properly belong to a recension akin to what is commonly called Lexicon Bachmannianum (Athens, Βιβλιοθήκη Βυζαντίου 1197; Σπουδαστήριον Ἰστορικῆς θεολογίας, 47; and Vat. gr. 1869) contain in the θα-section a text that closely resembles that of our v-mss.

Affiliations of the Manuscripts

BCFGH, Drachmann’s best and almost exclusive representatives of the entire recension, form a closely-knit group (vi), as can be observed both by their readings and the arrangement of their contents. Among their exclusive readings are not only the usual errors of text corruption, spelling, and accentuation, but omissions and additions of entire entries as well. All but one (\(\chi^6\)) of the omitted glosses occur in more or less the same form in at least one recension outside v. On the other hand, of the eleven glosses attested by vI alone, only one (\(\xi^{32}\)) seems to be a truly Cyrillean gloss found in exactly the same form in the a, g, and n recensions. Some are in reality but duplicates of genuine glosses (compare \(\xi^{24}\) with \(\xi^{28}\), \(\xi^{43}\) with \(\xi^{25}\), and \(\chi^6\) with \(\chi^{43}\)). It is noteworthy, however, that the additional glosses in the \(\chi\)-section have parallels not in the extant Cyrillean recensions but in Hesychius. In one of them (\(\chi^{19}\)) a citation from a lost Sophoclean drama (omitted by Hesychius) is preserved (a rarity for this lexicion), while \(\chi^{158}\) is clearly a dialectal gloss of the kind found frequently in Hesychius. Such glosses are usually and almost routinely attributed to the lost lexicion of Diogenianus, the progenitor of Hesychius' Lexicon. Since, however, the hypothesis of a fuller Diogenianus seems to me to lack satisfactory proof, I am inclined to attribute them to a fuller (or pre- abridged) version of Hesychius. It is significant in this connection that the home of this family seems to be in Southern Italy (cf. below), where Laurent. plut. 57.39 (= Drachmann's S) and the constellation of Matrit., Bibl. Univ. Z-22 No. 116, Haun. 1968, and Messan. S. Salv. 167 seem to have originated.

---

54 To judge from the script, quality of vellum, and extensive use of ink wash.

Besides the internal, i.e., textual, relationship, four of the above mss. (BFGH) share a number of external features which seem to suggest that they were the product of the same scriptorium. All four mss. seem to be fine editions of the Lexicon, written in the same format, with the same color of ink and with identical purple-colored rubrication. The script is regular, formal, and impersonal, resembling print rather than handwriting. Ligatures and abbreviations are rare. Besides, the writing of FGH is very similar, as if all three were written by the same hand.

55 Cf. \(\theta^7, 9, 12, 13, 25; \xi^5, 10, 13, 18, \) etc.—most of the errors are confined to vI. In one case the word order within the entry has been changed (\(\chi^{126}\)). In another, a word has been misplaced (cf. \(\chi^{110}, 111\)). In the \(\xi\)-section two related entries have been conflated into one (\(\xi^{30}, 31\)).

56 Omitted entries: \(\theta^{20}, 21, \chi^6, 77, 94, 95\). Additional glosses: \(\xi^8, 24, 32, 43, \chi^6, 19, 31, 90, 93, 157, 158\). \(\chi^92\) has been expanded considerably with additional matter. There are also minor additions and omissions within the entries: cf. \(\chi^{62}, 73, 121, 132\).

58 On the S. Italian provenance of this ms., cf. Pertusi, Leonzio Pilato, 484; and S. G. Mercati, op. cit. (above, note 9), 9.

59 Other mss. of the v-recension which are of S. Italian origin are S and Z. I intend to treat the question of the S. Italian copy of Hesychius more fully elsewhere.

60 Cf. my articles cited above (notes 3 and 17).
Within the family two groups can easily be distinguished: FH and BG. The special bond that ties F and H is both external (script and lay-out of the text) and internal, i.e., textual; cf. especially χ19 (ολάφει), 82 (νέος for νέος), 92 (addition of ιμάτιον after λεπτόν), 149 (προσχῶν for προσχοῦν), and conflation of ξ43, 44. Since F is younger and shows a further deterioration of the text, it seems likely that it is a copy of H. The view of direct dependence is amply supported both by the writing and by θ24, where F seems to have misunderstood a pen correction of H in reading θυτέρων for θυτέρου.61

The special relationship of B and G is shown in a number of strikingly corrupt readings that these mss. share: cf. θ22 (θάπτοντες vs. θάπτον), 24 (repetition of the word θύτερον), 25 (use of the singular for the plural), etc. Since both mss. seem to be roughly contemporary, their exact relationship can be determined only from the evidence of the text. B has many separative errors and of such a nature that they could not have been corrected by the scribe of G,62 whereas the opposite seems to be true in the case of G vs. B. Furthermore, B seems to have adopted the marginal or supralinear readings of G as well as corrections effected by the original scribe and/or the rubricator. At any rate, even if B is not a copy of G it seems to have no independent value except in the sections that are missing from G.

C stands between G and H but is generally closer to the former than to the latter. It is, however, marred with an enormous number of spelling errors. Therefore, agreement of C with either of the above mss. should indicate the reading of the family archetype (v1). This archetype was written ca. 1100, as is shown by a reference to that year incorporated in the discussion of what is περίοδος τοῦ ἀλφα and how to compute the intercalary period κατὰ λατινοὺς; and it was written in all probability in S. Italy, as is shown not only from the almost-certain S. Italian provenance of BC but also from the inclusion of the λέξεις ἐκ τοῦ ξίου τοῦ ἄγιου Ἡλία τοῦ Νέου, a S. Italian saint.63 This lost ms. had a good number of errors in spelling and accentuation, omissions and other scribal errors, which were faithfully reproduced by its descendants. But to compensate for it, it was interpolated with occasional glosses from a reputable lexicographic source, most probably the unabridged lexicon of Hesychius.

61 Similarly, in the α-section F's reading μηρότητα (vs. μαρότητα in H) can be explained as a failure on the part of the scribe to distinguish the iota from the accent of the word ἵφευκαν just below it. Cf. also my Rhet. Lex., 23.

62 Cf. θαμπόλος (87), χεδροπήν vs. χεδροπόν (χ56), μέρον vs. χιμέρον (χ92), change from the singular to the plural (χ87), omission of the article (87, χ62), etc.

63 Cf. my articles cited above (notes 3 and 17); cf. also Rhet. Lex.
The family stemma can be drawn as follows:

```
 VI
|   |
| H | C |
| F | G |
|   | B |
|   |   |
| Ba |
```

Closely related to VI is the v2 family, which consists of ten mss. (IJKKaLMNOPQ), none of which is earlier than the XIII s. With the exception of J and M, these mss. have been completely ignored by both Drachmann and Latte, and no assessment of the value of this family for the recovery of the archetype of the recension has ever been made.

The origin of the family cannot be traced as easily as that of VI. Two of the earliest mss., J and N (both dated) come from S. Italy, while all the others, with the possible exception of M, were either written in or came from various places in the East. The difference in provenance does not coincide with the two basic groups into which they are divided (cf. below). Since, however, both branches have early representatives in S. Italy and since the family is generally close to VI, the possibility of a S. Italian origin should seriously be reckoned with.

Although there is greater discrepancy between the individual members of the family, the general characteristics seem clear. There are only three glosses omitted by all the mss. (in addition to those found only in VI), 811, 23, and χ71; and no interpolations except those appearing in individual mss. (mostly J). The family has few exclusive readings attested by all mss., the most characteristic of which are found in the following glosses: ξ39 (addition of σύνθημα before σημείων, omission of τυί), 47 (ξεω for ξευθεν), χ25 (ἀθλίως vs. ἀδρόως), 43 (χάρις vs. χύσων) and the conflation of χ67, 68 into one entry. To these one may add a few more that seem to go back to the archetype, although they are not attested by all v2 mss.64

64 Cf. ξ21 (ἐμβαίνει, but ἐμβαίνει in Ka O), χ16 (ἐχον, but ἐχοντα L), 26 (ἐκείν [ἐσ πείναν K Ka L], but πείν M); cf. also χ16 (χαλεπῶ or χαλεπῶς for χαλκω), and note 67 below.
The family is neatly split into two groups, the first of which is made of five mss. (JKKaLM), the other of four (NOPQ). For the sake of convenience I call the first group v21, the second v22. The most characteristic reading of v21 is the change of θαλφίς (θ3) to θάλπος, which subsequently (in all except M) by wrong division was transferred to the next entry (θ4), of which it became the lemma. Also in χ23 four of the five mss. (KKaLM) have extended the lemma by one syllable, χαμαιτεταιφίς. The particular relationship of the v21 mss. is illustrated in the following stemma:

L as well as M are comparatively free from individual errors—indeed their readings are occasionally superior to those of all other v2 mss. Both are corrected mss. (with different degrees of success), as one might expect from so late and possibly learned copies. This becomes evident from instances of false correction, especially in the case of L. J and K (and Ka) have been interpolated, especially at the beginning of the Lexicon, but from different sources.

The second group (v22) seems to be in general more remote from the family archetype. Thus, it shows omissions of entire glosses (ε33; 41, χ14, 85, 91), addition of an extraneous gloss (ευνωρίδα: ζυγήν) after ε29, reversal of the order of glosses (ε31–32 and χ138–139), together with 65 I have no precise information about J besides a hasty examination of the ms. during my visit to Mt. Athos in the summer of 1970, but it seems to be part of the first group.

66 M actually reads χαμαιτεταιφίς. I consider J’s reading χαμαιταιφίς as due either to emendation or haplography. The readings of the v21 mss. clearly reflect an original supralinear correction, χαμαιτεταιφίς or χαμαιταιφίς.

67 To the examples given above (note 64) add the following: ε69 (χήλη M: χήν v), 148 (πεμμάτων M: πελμάτων v2); ε42 (ευνοδόκος L: ευνοδόκος v1, v21), 45 (κηραμός L: κινομός v2); χ107 (οίστηρες L: οίστρηκες οίστρηκες v2).

68 Cf. especially χ21, where χαμεπετεί was mistaken for a verbal form and the explanation adjusted accordingly (ταπεινός ή χαμαί κείται), and 58, where the unintelligible τοῦ ἄδου τῆς θύρας (for τοῦ οἴκου τῆς θ.) was changed to τῆς θύρας τοῦ ἄδου. Cf. also Lex. Rhet., 24 f.
spelling errors and other variants. Occasionally its readings are superior to those of virtually all \textit{v}-mss. (cf. χοάς in χ100, χρεώμενος in χ122, and χυδαῖος in χ145). They should be attributed to emendation. Within this group O and P form a distinct subgroup, which displays side by side corrections or improvements of corrupt readings and outright blunders. Neither seems to be dependent on the other, as is particularly shown by individual omissions. The last member of the \textit{v2} family (Q) seems to be close to OP, but it is further abridged and interpolated.

On the whole and apart from separative errors and readings, \textit{v2} seems to be closely related to \textit{v1}. The two families share a number of glosses that are absent from all other \textit{v}-mss. (§11, χ11, 32, 36, 125, 150, 151), whereas in some entries their explanation is “fuller” than that of the others (cf. §44, χ30, 46, 73, 74, 81, 120). The two families also display a few common errors and/or readings; cf. \textit{θαλησία} (θ6), \textit{ἔψειν} (ἐ23), ἦλις (χ35), τῷ ὀμιλί (χ53), χονδρίτων\footnote{χονδρίτων in FHOP.} (χ102), πελμάτων (χ148); cf. also \textit{χωρίσατε} (χ153), where \textit{v22} is probably corrected. It is therefore quite likely that they descend from a common exemplar. The fact that J has preserved the lexicon of life of St. Elias the Younger may suggest that the common ancestor of these two families was also written in S. Italy. In this case it would be interesting to know how the family proliferated also in the East.

The third well-defined family of the \textit{v}-recension (\textit{v3}) consists of ten mss. (ΓΔΘΛΞΠΣΦΒαΦβ), some of which are as early as the beginning of the twelfth century. The origin of the family is obscure but some claim may be made by S. Italy in view of the possible S. Italian origin of some mss. and the particular link with the Etym. Gudianum.

The general characteristics of the \textit{v3} family include: (a) addition of entire glosses. These fall into two main categories: those common to all \textit{v3}-mss. as well as to R; and a good number of the etymological glosses attested by all \textit{v3}-mss. except \textit{Γ} and listed by \Delta in the margins. (b) Omissions of entire entries or of parts thereof.\footnote{On the reciprocal influence between the Gudianum and \Delta, cf. Reitzenstein, \textit{op. cit.}, 84 ff. That a ms. of the \textit{v3} family was the source of the Cyrillean glosses of the Gudianum, is amply confirmed by such common readings as θαμίζει: πυκνάζει, άνευgos εὔει (cf. \textit{Etym. Gud.} p. 255,42 Sturz), \textit{χαμαίτυπων}: τῶν πολύ μετεχάνων τῶν συνονισῶν (cf. 962,27), and by the inclusion in the series of Cyrillean glosses listed together in the θ-section of some of the original \textit{v3}-additamenta, e.g., θαλή ή εὐδηνία, θάλεια: δόμα Μουσῆς (255,38–39).} More often than not the shorter entries agree with the corresponding entries of the \textit{g}-recension, and consequently cannot be dismissed as either blunders or deliberate omissions.71 (c) Additions and other changes within the entries.72 Perhaps the most revealing of these are the instances of double lemmata (θ1, χ48, 56), where what seems to be a correction appears beside the original corrupt reading. (d) There is finally ample evidence of text corruption, most notably the conflation of two unrelated entries (χ115, 116) into one, and of errors in spelling and accentuation. Because of the extent of Bearbeitung and corruption, as shown above, the readings of this family should be admitted into the text with great caution and only if they find confirmation from the independent mss. of v and/or the related recensions g and a.

Within the v3 family there is a good degree of differentiation. This appears chiefly in the number of additional entries admitted by each ms. as well as in the order of both regular and additional glosses. To take the θα-section as an example, Γ lists all the v entries minus 6 and 17 (the latter is missing from all v3-mss.). The order of glosses is identical with that of v2, except that gloss θέα γάρ appears among the θα-glosses. The additional glosses common to all v3 mss. and R are listed together in one batch between 11 and 12; and a new addition (θάνατος) appears before 18. Δ shows two more additional glosses in the main text, θαλέρος (between 2 and 3) and θάττον (between 21 and 22); has somewhat dispersed the original additamenta, and has kept all the new (etymological) glosses in the margins. It has also moved 9 between 4 and 5. Θ agrees with Γ in the order of the common glosses but additional glosses θαλέρος and θάττον are not in the same place as in Δ. The marginal glosses of Δ appear in batches in the text without much regard for the alphabetical order. Finally Θ has a number of additional glosses not found in Δ but attested in ΕΠΣΦΦα. The other mss. (referred to henceforth as v32) list the original, i.e., v-glosses in a slightly different order from the usual one, but have kept the original v3 additamenta together as a batch, between 10 and 13. The other additional glosses found in Θ and in the margins of Δ have been distributed so as to fit an alphabetical order based on the first three letters of the lemmata. Gloss θαλέρος (cf. supra) appears after 2 (as in Δ), but θάττον has been dropped and two new glosses added. Gloss θειάξω, which appears for the first time among the θα-glosses in Θ, 71 Only the following "omissions" have no parallels in the g-recension: ξ37 (ἡ χρήματα), χ35 (καὶ ἀληθρον), 53 (τῶν δικτυλων), 68 (καὶ αἰγός), 133 (προσιοννάτα).

72 Additions: cf. θ1, 22; χ39, 48, 53, 56, 87, 103, 126, 130, 152. Transpositions: cf. θ4, 5; χ43, 60, 62, 124. Changes: cf. θ12, 16, 23; ζ17, 46; χ8, 22, 49, 56, 60, 70, 87, 114, 129, 133; some of them have parallels in R or V W.
is also found in the same place in these mss. Codex $\Xi$ has added one more new gloss unattested in the other $v_3$ mss. The same general situation also prevails in the $\xi$- and $\chi$-sections.

Despite appearances neither $\Delta$ nor $\Theta$ seem to be the direct ancestors of $v_{32}$, but the latter group seems to have evolved from the common ancestor of $\Delta \Theta$ through correction, possible interpolation, and a certain degree of Bearbeitung. This accounts not only for the absence of a few errors common to $\Gamma \Delta \Theta$ and hence presumably of the family archetype, but also for the conflation or elimination of similar entries.\(^73\)

On the basis of the distribution of the additional entries as well as of their readings, the branching out of the mss. of this family can be sketched as follows:

\[\text{Etym. Gud.}\]

\[v_3\]

\[\Gamma \quad \Delta \quad \Theta \quad v_{32}\]

\[\Sigma \quad \Lambda \quad \Phi \]

\[\Phi_a \quad \Phi_b\]

\(^73\) Thus add. gloss $\chi e\iota ri\omega νa\xi$ has been eliminated, but its explanation has been added to that of gloss $\chi 52$. Conversely, the explanation of $\chi 43$ has been appended to that of add. gloss $\chi e\iota ri\omega v\iota i\mu$. The omission of $\chi 61$, 91 is clearly due to the presence of similar entries among the additamenta.
Besides the three larger families described above, there are a number of mss. which can be called independent. Some of them fall into small groups. The first such group consists of T and U. Their most striking common feature is the order in which they list the glosses. Indeed a rearrangement has been carried out with the intention of achieving stricter alphabetical order. Thus θ15 has been placed before θ1, θ25 before θ23, η7 before η6, η34 after 42, η4 after χ9, χ17 before χ12, etc. However, the rearrangement is only partial. Thus θ5 and 6 still precede θ7 and 8, η4 is before η5, χ35 before χ37, etc. The result of the rearrangement has been to effect an alphabetical order which is based on the first three or even more letters. Another by-product of the new arrangement is the occasional combination of related entries, e.g., η20 with 31 and (erroneously) χ61 with 85.

Besides the order of the entries, the two mss. share a number of readings that appear to be either restricted to them alone or are found only in one or more independent mss.; cf. the addition in χ76\(^{74}\) and the spellings πολυκύτων (χ22), ἡλύξ (χ35), etc.

A comparison of their individual readings shows convincingly that T, although younger and in many respects inferior to U, is independent from the latter ms. Thus T lists χ107, which U entirely omits, as well as δέ in θ4, θερμάνει in θ5, the article in χ62 and ως in χ82; cf. also the following readings of U, all involving corruption of the text which attempts at emendation could not remove: ξεστόν for ξεστόν (ξ12), συζυγή for ζυγή (ξ20), χάζειο: ἀναχώρει for χάζειο: ἀναχώρει (χ3)\(^{74a}\), and χαμαίτυπη for χαμαίτυπη (χ24). It becomes, therefore, clear that T descends not from U, but from a better and more complete ms., possibly U’s exemplar. However, because of innumerable scribal errors, T is of little use for the restoration of the text of v beyond the evidence that it provides about the history of the transmission. U, on the other hand, occasionally offers superior readings, which must be due to emendation rather than to a better tradition (cf. θ6, η19, χ66). It has indeed a number of corrections by the first hand\(^{75}\) and numerous additional glosses from another Cyrillean ms. at the end of the Lexicon.

The second group of closely related mss. consists of R and S. Their special relationship emerges clear from a number of common features that are restricted to these two mss. and which can hardly be considered accidental. These include the apparent conflation of θ23, 24, additions in the explanations of χ127, 139, omission of the lemma in θ20, and such readings as ξυνύσιον for ξυνάρον (ξ35), χιδρός (χιδρός R) for χιλός (χ89) and βραχιώλην for βραχιώλιον (χ96). Besides these the two mss. omit (in agreement with other independent mss. or with v3) a number of glosses (χ69, 72, 156) and have shorter explanation in θ22, χ30, 35, 38, 60, 81, 109, 121. They also list two additional glosses in the ξ-section (ξυμφορά, ξυνσχοίτο). These common features are all the more remarkable, since R seems clearly interpolated from an outside source.

\(^{74}\) Found also in W and originating from the g-recension.

\(^{74a}\) T however omits this entry.

\(^{75}\) Such corrections appear, for example, in θ18 (ἅποκτειν [ei ex?]), χ23 (χαμαίτυπη and corr. in marg. ὰις).

Interpolation in R takes the form of additional glosses which for the most part are identical with the original additamenta of the v3 family (i.e., essentially the additional glosses of Γ). The distribution of these new glosses among the v-glosses varies. In the θα-section they are all listed together as a group at the end of the v-glosses, i.e., after θ25. In the ξ- and χ-sections, however, they appear among the regular v-glosses in approximately the same places as in v3 (especially Γ). In fact, additional gloss ξόσανον in the ξ-section has taken the place of the original v-gloss (ξ14), while the latter appears between ξ7 and 9, out of the alphabetical order. In the same section there are two sets of duplicate glosses: ξυνών-ξυνόν and ξυνάρον-ξυνούσιον. Gloss ξυνόν is actually the corrupt counterpart of ξυνῶν (ξ33) in v3, while ξυνούσιον is the corrupt form of ξυνάρον (ξ35) in S. R lists ξυνόν before and ξυνάρον after ξ34, while ξυνών is listed together with ξυνούσιον following gloss ξ39 and the additional gloss ξυνσχοίτο. It is clear that here as in the case of ξ14 the v3 glosses were given precedence over the S-glosses.

In so far as the text is concerned, R generally agrees with S, but its text is in several instances superior, even though S may agree with T and U. R has also adopted a number of the peculiar readings of v3; (cf. θ1 and χ22, 30, 43, 48, 53, 56, 58, 62, 68, 100, 114, 126, 128, 129, 130, 133). Some of these involve omissions of words within the explanation, but the majority are of such a nature as to preclude anything but direct influence. It becomes, therefore, clear that R is a contaminated ms., i.e., it has combined the readings of two different strains of the tradition, one represented by S, the other by v3. It is noteworthy that in the earlier part of the Lexicon the scribe seems more reluctant to admit the v3 readings and keeps the v3 glosses apart, whereas in the latter part he shows impartiality and even admits the shorter entries of v3 without supplementing them from S.

A third group consists of three mss., V, Va, and W. These share two basic characteristics: a rearrangement of their entries to fit a stricter alphabetic order, and a large amount of additional glosses not found in v. Most of these additions are identical with glosses found in two mss. of the g-recension to which Drachmann assigned the sigla Γ and Λ, i.e., Cryptensis Z.α.V and Laurent. plut. 59.16. The new arrangement of the glosses, based on the first three letters of the lemmata, has resulted in an order which is not identical to that of TU.\textsuperscript{76} This group is also distinguished for its occasional superior readings (cf. \xi 40, \chi 1, 60, 67, 104, 147), which however (in view of the extensive revision that it has undergone) must not be genuine but are due either to emendation or to contamination. Let me add that the additional glosses of V, Va, and W form a group also found in U (as an appendix), as well as in gi.

The dependence of Va on V is complete. Va's text, however, is considerably inferior to that of V because of omissions and errors. The number of these blunders as well as an unexplained lacuna in the text of Va\textsuperscript{77} indicate that it is not a direct copy of V but is removed from it by at least one intermediary.

The relationship of VW in the \xi- and \chi-sections is unmistakable: cf. especially \xi 5, 37, \chi 12, 15, 22, 24, 38, 41, 45, etc. Both also have many additional glosses. In the \thetaα-section, however, the two agree very rarely and even then the agreement is not exclusive.\textsuperscript{78} Besides, the additional glosses which each of the two displays are entirely different. W's readings as well as some of its additional glosses show a clear influence from an outside source independent from V.\textsuperscript{79} This source can be identified with a distinct group within the g-recension which consists of the following mss.: Athens, Byz. Museum, No. 186, in its original or vellum part (see above); Hauniensis 1970; Laurent. plut. 58.30; and Vindob. phil. gr. 319. Here are the most striking examples of the agreement: \theta 14 (add ἀλλεπάλληλα), additional gloss ἑπαρασφάλει, \xi 33 (add κοινών), \chi 54 (κεχειρισμένα for κάκιστα), \chi 129 (add ἦ δῆλωσίς) and additional gloss χροὸς ἀδην. In many more cases the readings adopted by W independently from V are \textsuperscript{76} This is true for the \xi- and \chi-sections. For the order of W in the \thetaα-section, cf. note 78 below.

\textsuperscript{77} Va omits 70-odd entries between \chi 54 and 101 without apparent reason. Neither the beginning nor the end of the lacuna coincide with the beginning or end of a page in V. If Va was copying directly from V, the omission would not be due to a purely mechanical error.

\textsuperscript{78} The most striking is the reading ὀφεγῇμενος (\theta 18), found also in OP. Neither ms., however, shows any of the striking separative errors of the other. Note also that the order of the ν-entries in this section is different in the two mss., that of W resembling closely the order of TU.

\textsuperscript{79} There is some external evidence to that from the cramming of some of the additional glosses and the additions within the entries in the space between the text and the inner margins which would otherwise be left blank. The outer margins also have numerous additions. All these were probably due to the original scribe.
found in g, but they are not restricted to the above mss.: cf. θ7, 20, 23; ξ12 (om. γεγυμμένου), 17, 36; χ30 (ἡ οἱ μικροὶ ρώμες), 76, 94, 111, 121 (om. βῆσσει οἶνον), 127, 140, 143; also in listing ξ32, an entry absent from all v-mss. except v1 but occurring in g. The manner in which W incorporates the new readings can be illustrated by the following examples. In χ96 it has adopted the g-reading (κόσμου περὶ τῶν βραχίωνα [sic]) and then added supra lineam ἡ τῶν τράχηλων, i.e., the part of the v-entry missing from g. In χ149 it introduces the g-reading at the end of the entry as a variant (ἄλλα σον εἰσηκα προσχοῦν τὰ τείχη). Because of the extent of outside influence w’s exact relationship to V cannot be determined.

For the convenience of reference as well as because the mss. R through W share a number of common features, I refer to them sometimes in the critical apparatus with the sign v4.

The remaining mss. (XYZΩ) are too fragmentary to allow (as of now) any judgement about their exact relationship to one another and to the other mss. of the recension. However, in the one section (of the three under consideration here) which they have in common,82 they agree in omitting φόβος in θ11 and ἡ ἀποκτείνη in 18,83 both of which are also omitted by v3.84 Note also the spelling ὑπερομένως in θ18.

There is further agreement between YZ, shown by the omission of δὲ in θ485 and of θαρασάλως in θ20.86 Furthermore, Υ and Ω agree in error in reading θασσοῦ in θ25. Finally, X and Z agree in listing θ25 after θέα γάρ, the first entry of the θε-section.

Z is the best ms. of the group. It is also noteworthy for occasional interpolations from a ms. of what I call an unabridged version of Hesychius: perhaps the same ms. that provided the learned interpolations of v1 (RS: additional gloss ἐνυφορά), and of the three closely related mss. (which 80 The formula ἄλλα σον is also found in χ147 and 136 (in the latter case ἄλλα σον γρ.).

81 This is not restricted to one source only. Besides etymological additions (cf. θ7, χ5, 49, and in many marginal glosses which were clearly taken from the Lexicon of Pseudo-Zonaras), there are readings which are restricted to some g-mss. (especially Par. gr. 2617, which besides Cyrillic also contains Pseudo-Zonaras) but have no parallel in the four mss. listed above.
82 The χ-section is missing from three mss., while in the fourth (Ω) it has been replaced from another ms. XY also lack the χ-section.
83 ΥΩ omit θ18 altogether.
84 Also by g, with the exception of a few mss. which have φόβος.
85 Ω omits the gloss altogether.
86 Also missing from v3 Ω. X agrees here with RS in omitting θαρασάλως and making θαρασάλως the lemma of the entry.

X is also useful, despite omissions (θ2, 15, 21 and part of 22) and scribal errors, especially when in agreement with Z, serving as a check of the readings of the archetype, since both mss. (XZ) seem to branch out from near the top of the stemma (cf. below). Y despite its late age presents a better and fuller text than Ω, which is marred with omissions and arbitrary tampering with the text.

A careful analysis of all variants of the mss. shows a consistent agreement of v1 and v2 (especially in the number and size of entries) as against v3, with the remaining or independent mss. splitting their allegiance between the two extremes. Indeed XYZΩ seem to side always against v1 v2, whenever the latter shows a "fuller" text as compared to that of v3 and g. This extends also to entries where v1 v2 find support for their longer entries in some of the independent mss. (cf. θ11, 18; ξ12, 13, 37). It is reasonable to assume that this agreement extended also to the χ-section (now missing from all of these four mss.), where the cases of disagreement between v1 v2, on the one hand, and v3, on the other, are more numerous.

The case of RSTUV[VaW is more complicated. These mss. side with v1 v2 more often than not when these two groups disagree with v3 g.

It is not clear, however, whether these seven mss. emanated from one and the same source. RSTU have a number of common errors that may seem decisive in favor of a common exemplar, from which the progenitors of the pairs RS and TU were copied. Note especially the reading τρόφιμον (for τρίμορφον) in χ84 and χόθαως (χ144), attested by all four mss. One may also add the following readings which, although confined to STU, may be considered as descending from the common source but avoided by R under the influence of its second exemplar: θαλαμίπολος (θ7), θαυσοσώκου (θ25), ξούθος (ξ15), χλαμίς for χλανίς (ξ25), χαλκίς

87 On the interpolation of these three mss., cf, my article (above, note 57).

88 Thus Ω lists a number of θ-glosses before θα, completely out of the alphabetical order; it often adds (in an unnecessary and often illogical manner) such trivial words as λέγει, γράφει, τίθεται, καί, simply for the sake of variation; it also joins unrelated entries into one long period; finally, it rephrases and adds outside matter in the entries.

89 Cf. θ11, 14, 17, 18, 25, 33, 35, 41, 45, 155; cf. also ξ12, 37; χ30, 100, 107, 127, 128, 129, 133, 143, 144, where the addition is attested by all but one of the seven independent mss. (W).

90 Other common errors are less decisive, because they are of an orthographic nature: cf. θ3 (θαλπορή), χ4 (κώμηρ), 35 (βαγδεστέρως), etc.
Mark Naoumides

(\chi^{15}), \kappaυλόδεις (\chi^{18}), \chiβόνος (\chi^{80}). In the common traits one should also add the inclusion by RSU of the alphabetical Homeric Lexicon, published in part by V. de Marco,\(^\text{91}\) which is unattested from elsewhere.

The view of a common exemplar is, however, confronted with a most serious objection: How to explain the presence in TU of some additamenta found also in vi vi\(^2\) but absent from RS vi\(^3\) (and furthermore from g)?\(^\text{92}\) Their absence from RS cannot be explained as accident,\(^\text{93}\) because of their number and extent and because of the fact that some of these are found at the beginning or middle of the explanation. An examination of these additamenta shows that they originated from marginal or supralinear explanations added by the scribe or a subsequent reader of the archetype; cf. χαρίην for χαρίεσαν (\chi^{38}), χεραίν ἐργαζομένην for ἀπὸ χειρῶν ζῶσαν (\chi^{60}), ἀνωθεν καὶ κάτωθεν ἔμετος for ἐκκρίσις διὰ στόματος καὶ γαστρός (\chi^{109}), βῆσει (actually written βίσει) for ἥχον τῷ στόματι ἀποτελεῖ (\chi^{121}). The process of insertion of such marginal notes into the text can be seen at work in \theta^{20}, where the variant θαρµαλέως, absent from vi vi\(^3\) YZΩ, has ousted the original reading θαρµαλέως in RSX, but is listed side by side by vi vi\(^2\) TUVW; and furthermore in \chi^{128}, where the addition μαντεύοµενα (omitted by vi\(^3\) RW) appears before προλεγόµενα in vi TUV but after it in vi\(^2\) and S.\(^\text{94}\) The omission of \chi^{69} (omitted by vi\(^3\) RSXW but attested by g), of \chi^{72} (apparently a corrupt counterpart of \chi^{71}), and of \chi^{156} with the unintelligible lemma χώτα (for χρῶτα) may be deliberate. For accidental omissions cf. above, note 93.

All in all, the hypothesis of a common ancestor for RSTU is, I believe, more probable than a recourse to another split of the stemma, which would presuppose that the elimination of the common errors of RSTU further down in the stemma is due to emendation. A further comparison of the readings of VW with those of RSTU shows that they are close to TU, despite extensive correction helped by the use of a g-type ms. which served as a second exemplar (cf. above). For all these reasons I have assigned a special siglum (v\(^4\)) to all these mss.

\(^{91}\) Op. cit. (above, note 33).

\(^{92}\) Cf. \chi^{35} (καὶ χάσμα), 38 (χαρίην), 60 (χεραίν ἐργαζοµένην), 72 (entire gloss, omitted by T), 81 (τρίφηµα—φτοµτόµενος), 109 (ἀνωθεν—ἥτων), 121 (βῆσει, ὀὖν), 156 (entire gloss).

\(^{93}\) Accident, however, cannot be altogether excluded; compare the omission of ἐνσοι in \xi^{14} by TU; the omission of \theta^{18} by RS, and quite possibly of the word βαλάσανον in \chi^{35}.

\(^{94}\) Cf. also \chi^{60} (πενυχράν) and 139 (χρυσάοφορα).
The final stemma of the family can therefore be drawn as follows:

How old is the recension? On purely palaeographical grounds it must be older than 1000 A.D., since some of our mss. (especially S) can be dated around that year. I should like to suggest that the exact date is fixed by a reference to the year 876, incorporated into a treatise of how to compute the cycles of the sun and moon and preserved in the v1-mss. and in J. This evidence is corroborated by the acrostic of a short epigram which refers to the reign of Basil, undoubtedly Basil I the Macedonian. Both the epigram and the reference to the year 876 were transmitted to the various descendants of v together with the minor lexica and other material following, and in a way supplementing, the Lexicon and thus forming a corpus, as it were, which can be called the Cyrillean corpus. Since both the reference to the year 876 and that to the emperor Basil are not found among the minor lexica of the other extant recensions, we may safely, I believe, consider them as indicating the date of the formation of the v-recension.

95 Cf. my articles cited above (notes 3, 17), and Rhet. Lex., 25-27.
96 This epigram in nine dodecasyllables with the quadruple acrostic, 'Εν θεοδ νόν | ὁ βασιλεύ | βασιλεία | βασιλευος, was published by G. S. Mercati in Studi Bizantini e Neoolenenic 3, 1931, 294 f. Mercati was not sure, however, whether the epigram referred to Basil I or Basil II, but would prefer the former.
The text of the sections on which the present study was based is given below not in its pure form, i.e., in the form in which it presumably appeared in the lost archetype of the recension, but with all subsequent accretions as reflected in the text of v1. In order to distinguish, however, the original from the extraneous matter, I have employed square brackets for the latter. Corrupt readings have been retained in the text (unless corrected in some of our mss.), whenever it was felt that this was the reading of the archetype. Some of them have parallels in g or other recensions. In a critical edition, however, these should be eliminated: here they merely illustrate the state of the archetype.

For similar reasons, the critical apparatus is not confined to important or true variants, but has been expanded to include all variant readings, even trivial ones, so far as they illustrate the relationship of the mss. and their families, regardless of their value for the recovery of the "original" text. Accordingly, this is not a specimen edition but an appendix or supplement to the preceding discussion. Certain restrictions, however, have been set, in order to eliminate the obvious or insignificant. Thus spelling errors have not been listed for the most part, especially when occurring in secondary mss. If they are widespread but of no significance for the relationships of the mss., they have been listed with the indication nonnulli without further specification. All readings of Ba, Ka, Q, Va, Fa, Fb and the extravaganzas of O have been eliminated entirely for obvious reasons. The readings of I (and of A in the ξ- and χ-sections) have not been recorded for lack of collations. Parentheses have been used to indicate that the reading of a ms. is not entirely identical with the reading recorded but either presuppose it or has been derived from it.

University of Illinois at Urbana

Codd.: BCFGHJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZΔΘΛΞΠΣΘ (Ba, Ka, Q, Va, Fa, Fb lectiones omisi)

1. Glossam om. O θάκων θόνων καθέδρων
2. Glossam om. XY θάκως O P

97 However, all additional glosses of individual mss. or subgroups, as well as the etymological glosses of v3, have been entirely omitted.
3. Glossam om. \( \Omega \) θαλπορη \( \nu \) (N) R S (T) U X, θαλπορι \( \Gamma \) θάλψις om. J K L θάλπος pro θάλψις M

5. περισκεπάσαι nonnulli, συντηρήσαι nonnulli, συντηρήσαι B S \( \Gamma \) θερμαίναι om. U, θερμάναι compl. θερμάναι ante περισκεπάσαι v3, ante συντηρήσαι V

6. Gloss. om. X \( \Gamma \) θάλασσαι S Y \( \Delta \) \( \Xi \) \( \Sigma \) \( \Omega \), θαλάσσαι v1 v2 T

7. θαλαμίτολος v1 R Z, θαλαμίτολος (S) (T) U o om.B άναστρέφόμενος v1 kai φυλάττων, είρηται δὲ παρά τὸ θάλειν ἀκα om. W

8. θαλάττεις C F H T, θάλάττησις Λ \( \Pi \) \( \Sigma \)

9. θαλία vi Z ευνοία v1

10. θαλαμόν v3 (exc. \( \Sigma \)) νεότατον (νεότατον \( \Sigma \)) vi v3 (exc. \( \Pi \))

11. Gloss. om. \( \Lambda \) φόβος om. v3 X Y Z \( \Omega \)

12. ἀκανθόδεις v1 N λέγεται δὲ (και add. v3) βάτος v3 V: o λέγεται βάτος cett.

13. θαμά v22 T W Y Ω, θάμα S U Z, θάμα v1 πυκνός ante συνεχῶς V

14. ἀλλεπόλληθα add. W

15. Gloss. om. X \( \Lambda \) leg. βαστή gloss. om. \( \Phi \) \( \Omega \) θαμάζει (O) P \( \alpha \) γεί (λέγει \( \Sigma \)) pro \( \alpha \) γεί v3

17. Gloss. om. v3 \( \Omega \) o om J T ἀποκτείνων M T, ἀποκταίνων S W, ἀποκταίνων L

18. Gloss. om. L R S T Y \( \Pi \) \( \Phi \) \( \Omega \) ὁρεγόμενος X Z, ὁρεγόμενος O P V W \( \eta \) ἀποκτείνει om. v3 X Z, ἀποκτείνη U V V, ἀποκτείνουσι (J) O P

19. Gloss. om. \( \Omega \)

20. Gloss om vi \( \theta \)ρασάλεως om. R S X θαρσάλεως om. v3 W Z \( \Omega \) εὐθαράσιος nonnulli εὐθάρασιος ante ἀνδρείως W

21. Gloss. om. vi X \( \theta \)ρασάλεως ἀπο \( \theta \)ρασιος v3
22. θάσσων: θάττον, τούτεστιν ταχέως
23. βάτερον: ἐκάτερον, τὸ ἐν τῶν δύο
24. βάτερον βατέρου: ἕτερον ἕτερου
25. βάσσουσαι: σπεύδουσαι

22. θάσσων nonnulli βάττον nonnulli, βάττοντες B G τούτεστιν om. L R S V, τουτέσται ν2 X Y ταχέως om. V καὶ ταχύτερον add. ν3
23. Gloss. om. ν2 ἐκάτερον nonnulli ἢ ἐν πρὸ τὸ ἐν ν3, τὸ ἕτερον W
25. βασσουσαί S (T) Ω, βασσου Y Ω. βαροῦσαι (-σα B G) ν1 σπεύδουσα B G

Ἀρχι τοῦ ξ στοιχείων

1. ξαίνω: νήθω, σωρεύω
2. ξανθήν: πυρροείδη
3. ξανθίζεσθαι: κομμείσθαι τὰς τρίχας
4. ξενοςύνην: ξένην φιλίαν
5. ξενόι: οἱ ἀπὸ ξένης φίλοι
6. ξενιὰς: ὁ τοὺς ξένους ἄγων, ἀνηγών, ξενοδοχῶν
7. ξενόν: φίλον
[8. ξέασα: γράφας]
9. ξενίαν: καταγωγίαν, κατάλυμα
10. ξενιζουσαν: ἀλλόφυλον, ἁθή
[11. ξέοντας: μοστίζοντας]
12. ξεστόν: ὀμαλισμένον, [γεγλυμμένον]
13. ξεφήρεις: ξεφηφοροῦντες, [ἐνοπλοί]

Codd.: BCFGHJKLMNOPRSTUVWZΓΔΞΠΣΦΩ; XY carent (Ba, Ka, Q, Va, Λ Φα, Φb omisi)

1. νήσων (νοσοῦν Σ) ν3
2. πυρροείδη ν1 R S Z Ω, πυρροείδη ν2 (T) U, πυρροείδη ν31 Ε Φ
4. ξενιωσύνην L V W
5. ξενοι ν1 ν2 R S T U οἱ ἀπὸ ξένους ν1 J, οἱ ἀπὸ ξενίας V W
6. ξενιάγων Ε Π Σ Φ, ξενίάγων Γ Δ Θ
8. Gloss. om. codd. exc. ν1 Z
9. Gloss. om. Ω
10. ξενιζουσαν Γ Π (Ω) ἀλλόφυλον ν1, ἀλλόφυλον J (N) Ρ W ἁθή Φ Η Ρ Δ Θ Ε
11. Gloss. om. codd. exc. ν1 ν2
12. ξεστόν U ὀμαλισμένον (vel ὄμ.) nonnulli γεγλυμμένον om. ν3 Ζ W Ω
13. ξεφήρει O P ξεφηφοροῦντες ν1, ξεφηφοροῦντας ν3 ἐνοπλοί om. ν3 Τ U Ζ Ω
14. \textit{ξώδιον}: ἡγαλμα, εἰδωλον, ξώδιον, ἀνδριᾶς
15. \textit{ξοῦθος}: ξανθός
16. \textit{ξοῦθα}: ξανθά
17. \textit{ξύιει}: γράφειν ὅθεν καὶ ξύσματα τὰ γράμματα
18. \textit{ξυλιξομένη}: ξύλα συλλέγουσα
19. \textit{ξύμμαχοι}: σύμμαχοι
20. \textit{ξυνωρίς}: συνωρίς, ξυγή
21. \textit{ξυμβάινει}: συμβαίνει
22. \textit{ξυνθήματος}: σημείου
23. \textit{ξύνιον}: ξένιον
24. \textit{ξυνεχώς}: συνεχώς
25. \textit{ξύστρα}: χλανίς
26. \textit{ξυστέναι}: συνιέναι, νοσάει
27. \textit{ξυνούσια}: συνούσια, μίζις
28. \textit{ξυνεχῶς}: συνεχῶς, διὰ παντός
29. \textit{ξυναρμόσας}: συναρμόσας, συνάφας
30. \textit{ξυνωρίδα}: ἄρμα ἐκ δύο ἵππων συνεξευγμένων
31. \textit{ξυνωρίδα}: ξυγήν· κυρίως δὲ ἐπὶ τῶν ἡμίόνων. ὀρείς γὰρ ὁ ἡμίονος
32. \textit{ξύνορον}: κοινωνῶν

17. Gloss. om. T ξύστρα (Ξ) (Π) Σ Φ γράφη v1 Kac N Z Π ὡς παρ᾽ Ὀμέρω post γράφη add. W ξύσματα γὰρ τὰ (γὰρ τὰ om. Τ) γράμματα v3
18. ξυλιξομένη v1
20. Gloss. om. v32 R T U Z Ω (cum 31 iunx. T U) ξυνωρίς v1 συνωρίς om. v31, συνωρίς v1 T συνωρίς U
21. ξυμβάινει v2 (exc. Κα Ο)
22. Gloss. om. V
23. ξύνιον v1 v2. ξένιον V ξένιον v2
24. Gloss. om. codd. exc. v1
25. ξύστρα v1 V Ω: ξύστρα cett. χλανίς S (T) U leg. ξυστίδα: χλανίδα
27. Gloss. om. Ω συνούσια om. Κ, συνούσια B G
28. Gloss. om. Ω
30. ξυνωρίς Ω ἄρμα nonnulli συνεξελευμένων B Cα G, συνεξελευμένων v2 (exc. N) v3 (exc. Ξ) S
31. Gloss. om. K N, cum. praec. conf. (lemmate om.) v1 V W ἡμίων (vel ἴμων) v1 ὀρείς nonnulli ἡμίων (vel ἴμων) v1
32. Gloss. om. codd. exc. v1 Wm
33. ἔνων: συνών
34. ἠστιδᾶς: περιβόλαια
35. ἡμόρον: γαμετήν
36. ἴμμονήσαι: συμμονήσαι
37. ἡμία: κοίνα πρόγνατα [ἡ χρήματα]
38. ἵππε: σύνες, ἰκουσον
39. ἴμμοματος: συμμοματος· ἐστὶ δὲ σημεῖον ἢ πρόσθεγμα διδόμενον ἐπὶ γνωρισμῷ τῶν οἰκείων ἢ πολέμῳ ἢ ἐτέρᾳ τινὶ ἐπιβουλή
40. ἴμμοδά: συμμοδά
41. ἵππησκος: συγκάθεδρος
42. ἴμμοδόκος: ἰμμοδόκος
43. ἵμπτρα: <χ>λαίσ
44. ἠστιδᾶ: λεπτὸν ὑφασμα [ἡ περιβόλαιον]
45. ἴμμος: κοινιμός
46. ἴππος: τότος ἀνείμένος ἀθλητῶν
47. ἱδέε: ξειθεν

33. Gloss. om. v22 Ω ἔνων: συνών nonnulli κοινῶν προ συνών v3 κοινῶν add. W
35. ἡμόροιον ΣΤ
37. ἱμαί V W; leg. ἵππια ἡ χρήματα om. v3 R Z Ω
38. Gloss. om. v3
39. σύνθημα ἀντε σημεῖν add. v2 σημεῖα B C G διδόμενος Δ Θ έτερα B G Z Π τινι om. v2 ἐπιβουλή nonnulli, ἐπιβουλευ ἰνι
41. Gloss. om. v22 συμκάθεδρος nonnulli
42. Gloss. om. W ἴμμοδόκος v1 J K M, ἴμμοδόκος V, ἴμμοδόκος W= Ω
43. Gloss. om. codd. exc. v1 λαίσ F H, λαίσ B C G
44. Gloss. cum praec. conf. lemmate omisso F H ἡ περιβόλαιον om. codd. exc. v1 v2
45. κοινοῦς v2 (exc. J L) R V W, κοινοῦς J ξέδεθεν add. Γ
46. ἀνειμένον v1 ἀφορομένος προ ἀνειμένος v3 ἀθλιτῶν C G αο
47. ξέδεθ v1 K N Z, ξέδεθ (ξέδεθεν Σ) v3 V W ξειθεν v2 (exc. K) Ω

Ἀρχὴ τοῦ χ στοιχείου

1. χάδεν: ἱδχάρησεν ἢ μετέσχεν
2. χάζετο: ἀναχώρησεν

Codd.: BCFGHJKLMNORPSTUVWFΔΠΣΦ (Ba, Ka, Q, Va, A, Φα, Φβ omisi; non habent XYZ(Ω)ΘΞ)
2. ἀναχώρησεν R
3. χάζειον: ἄναχωρει
4. χαίτην: τὴν κόμην τῶν τριχῶν
5. χάζεο τῆλε: ἄναχωρεῖ μακρὰν
[6. Χαιρούμμα: πλήθος γνώσεως ἡ σοφία]
7. χαζομένω: ἄναχωροῦντι
8. χαίρειν φράσαντες: ἀποτασάμενοι, καταγνώτες
9. χαίρετε: θαρρεῖτε
10. χαλεπήνας: ἀγανακτήσας
[11. χαλεπώτερος: δυσκολώτερος]
12. χάλεαι: τοὺς ὄνωτι
13. χαλκεομήστωρ: ἱσχυρόφωνος
14. χαλέπτει: κακίζει, [κατασπονεῖ]
15. χαλκής: ἡ γλαυξ· εἰδός ὀρνέου
16. χαλκοκορυστήν: χαλκῷ ὀπλιζόμενον ἢ κράνος ἔχοντα χάλκουν
17. χαλεπῶς: δυσκόλως, [δυσχερώς, κακῶς]
18. χαμαιζήλιον: [ταπεινόφρονες], ταπεινοί: ἡ δίφοροι κουλώδεις [ἡ οἱ τὰ γήινα φρονοῦντες]
[19. χαμεννά: ἡ ἐπὶ γῆς κατάκλισις· καὶ τὸ ταπεινὸν κλινὸν χαμενή, Ἡσοφοκλῆς Δόλοις]
20. χαμαιεύνης: χαμόκοιτος
21. χαμαιπτετει: ταπεινῶ ἢ χαμαι κειμένῳ

3. Gloss. om. T χαζετο U Σ ἄναχωρεῖ vi U
4. κόμην O PR S (T) U
5. χαζετήλε N R S (T) (U), χαζετήλαι vi τῆλε γὰρ τὰ μακρὰν add. W
7. Gloss. om. Σ χαζωμένω C F H, χαζωμένος B G
8. καταγνώτες vi (J) (K) N R S T U, ἀπογνώτες V, ἀπογνώντες (ἀπογνώναι Φ) v3 W
9. χαρεται τι T, χαῖροντες Δ _ μαρεῖται vi (N) S T
10. Gloss. om. T χαλασάνας vi R Π Δ Σ
11. Gloss. hab. vi v2: cett. om. χαλασάτερος vi δυσκολώτερος vi
12. χαλίπαν v W, χαλίπα M; leg. χαλάται τοῖς om. V W Π
13. Gloss. om. v22 χαλέπτεις Δ κατασπονεῖ om. v3
15. χαλκῆς S T U, χαλκῆς vi γλαξεῖ nonnulli, γλαξ F H, γλαξ J K Γ εἴδος ὀρνέου
16. χαλκὸν Γ Δ, χαλέπω D^o J M, χαλέπως v22 K L ἐχοντα C F H Π, ἐχον v2 (exc. L)
17. χαλασάτις R δυσχερός κακῶς om. v3
18. χαμεζήλιον τι R S ταπεινόφρονες om. v3 διφροκολώδεις vi κοιλώδες N R^o W^o Γ, κοιλώδες U, κοιλώδες S, κοιλώδες T ἢ—φρονοῦντες om. v3
20. χαμενήν Γ, χαμενήν v3 (exc. Γ), χαμενής S T (U) χαμκόκοιτος vi, χαμαίκοιτος v3 (exc. Γ), χαμαίκοιτος v W Γ
21. ταπεινῶν T Γ Δ, ταπεινῶς L κειμένων K (Γ) Δ, κεῖται L
22. χαμαίτυπων: τῶν πολυκοιτῶν συνοισίων
23. χαματαίρις: πόρη
24. χαμαίτυπη: πόρη ἄδοξος
25. χανδών: [ὗνοιγμένοις,] ἀπλήστως, ἀδρῶς, χωρητικῶς
26. χανδών πιεῖν: κεχρυστῶς καὶ ἀδρῶς πιεῖν
27. χαρακτηρίζει: διὰ τῶν αὐτῶν χαρακτῆρας σημαίνει
28. χάρακες: ἀκάνθαι καὶ κάλαμοι
29. χαράβδη: λύμη στόυν
30. χαράδρα: αἱ ὑδροεῶμες [χείμαρροί, διαφέσεις, σχίσματα, ῥήγματα γῆς] οἱ μικροὶ ῥύκακες

[31. χαῖος: ὁ δηλοὶ τὴν ράβδον]
[32. χαράδρα: τὸν χείμαρρον]
33. χαρακτήρισ: χαράκκωμα, περιήγαγμα, [ὑποστήριγμα]
34. χαρωπός: ἐπιχαρής, εὐφόβαλμος
35. Χαρυβδῆς: [ὑπὲριον ἀναρροφοῦ τῆς θάλασσαν· καὶ] ἡ ἀναπυμνίσμεν θάλασσα περὶ τῷ Γάδειρο καὶ πάλιν ῥαγδαίοτέρως ἐπαναστρέφουσα· εἰρήται δὲ [καὶ χάσμα θαλάσσιον ἰλιγγά] καὶ πᾶν τὸ εἰς χαῖο καὶ ὀλέθρον καταστοῖν

22. τῶν πολύ μετεχόντων τῶν συνοισίων πρὸ τῶν πολυκ. συν. ν3 R πολυκοίτων T U, πολυκοίτων V W
23. χαματαιρίς ν22, χαματαιρίς ST, χαματαιρίς ν1 ν3 J R U W= W, χαματαιρίς K L (M)
24. Gloss. om. v3 (exc. Γ Λ) χαμαίτυπει C F G H, χαμαίτυπη (R) T Γ Λ, χαμαίτυπης S U, χαμαίτυπης V W η ἄδοξος R
25. χάνδων ν1 K M N S T U ὑνοιγμένοις om. ν3, ὑνοιγμένοις ν1 R S T U ἄδρως ν1, ἀθλίως πρὸ ἄδρως ν2 χαριτκῖκος J O R T, χωρητικὸς C B G, χωρητικὸς F H
26. χάνδων ποιεῖν nonnulli πόλι αἱ κεχρυστῶς add. ν2 R S T U V W κεχρυστῶς F H, κεχρυστῶς B G C ποιεῖν ν1 Γ Σ εἰσπέν πρὸ πικεῖν ν22 J, εἰς πείναν K L
27. αὐτῶν om. ν22
28. ἀκάνθαι ν2 B Π: ἀκάνθαι cett.
29. λοίμα ν1 φθορά πρὸ λύμη R
32. Gloss. hab. ν1 ν2 (exc. L): cett. om. χαράδραν ν1
33. χαράκκωμα ν1 S ν2 υποστήριγμα om. ν3
34. χαρισμὸς ν1 T W ἐπιχαρής ν1, περιχαρής Ο (P)
Illinois Classical Studies, IV

[36. χαρίεσαν: χαριστάτην, τερπνήν]
37. χαρία: βουνός, σωρός
38. χαρίεσαν: [χαρίην:] χαριστάτην, τερπνήν
39. χαρέη: τερπθείη, ευφρανθείη
40. χαρατήρια: ευχαί τεντικόι ευχαριστιάν ἔχουσαι
41. χάμα: σχήμα, χάος, [στάμα ἀνεφγιμένον]
42. χανώνας: ἁρτῶς ἀναψυραδέντας κραθύνος η λάγανα ὑπῆτα
43. Χερουβιμ: πλήθος γνώσεως η σοφίας χύσαν
44. χειρόθεις: πράον, ἤμερον
45. χειρόκομητα: [χειροποίητα,] ὑπὸ χειρῶν γεγυμλέμενα η περιεξεμένα η κατευργασμένα
46. χειροτονία: ἐκλογή παντὸς δήμου [καὶ πάντων κύρωσιν]
47. χειρώσασθαι: ὑποτάξαι
48. χειλαί: αἱ καταδύσεις τῶν ὀφεων καὶ φωλείοι
49. χειρόμακτρον: διὰ παρὰ Ῥωμαίοις καλεῖται μανδήλιον
50. χειρόγραφον: συμβόλαιον, γραμμάτιον χρέως ὀμολογητικῶν
51. χεῖρε: τὰς χεῖρας διύκως
52. χειρόναξε: τεχνίτης
53. χείμεθλον: τὸ ἐν χειμῶνι γινόμενον ἐν ταῖς ῥωξί τῶν δακτύλων τῶν ποδῶν ἐλκος

37. χάρια v1, χαριά P V W
39. χαριά v3 N, χαρίτη T
40. επικυκλοι v3 εὐχαριστείαν v1 (J) (K) S W, εὐχαριστηρίαν v3
41. γόνδ pro χαίον V W στόμα ἀνεφγιμένον om. v3
42. χαυνάς (vel χαιώνας) v3 R ἀναψυραδέντας v3 Λάχανα nonnulli
43. Gloss. om. V W Χερουβιμ Γ Δ Φ ἐπὶ ἐνικοῦ διδόγγου, ἐπὶ δὲ πληθυντικοῦ διὰ τοῦ ἓ ἐστὶ δὲ ante πλῆθος add. v32 ή χώσις σοφίας v3 R χάρις pro χώσιν v2
44. χειροθέες Γ Ε Φ, χαροθέες Δ, χειροθέες Σ, χειροθέες Π ήμερον nonnulli
45. χειρόγραφη V W χειροποίητα om. v3 κατευργασμένα v1 N P W
46. χειροτονεύα v1 M ἐγκληγή v1 (exc. B) τοῦ δήμου R S καὶ—κύρωσις hab. v1 v2: cett. om. χαρίες v1
47. χέα καὶ χεια v3 R ἡ κατάδοσι v1 καὶ om. v3 φωλαιοί S (T) U, φολαιοί v1 v3 (exc. 2) M N, φολαιοι R
48. χειρόμακτρον v1 T W δ ῥωμαίοι μανδήλιον λέγουσιν v3 μανδήλιον R S T, μανδήλιον B C G V, μανδήλιο καὶ τὸ ἐκμάσσεσσα τὴν ὑλὴν add. W
49. χαμβόδελου v1 T U γραμματείον v3 R V W, γραμματεύον Μ
50. Gloss. om. L Π χείρα v1, (Ν) T (Γ) Δ Ε χείραs nonnulli
51. χειρώναξ v1 τεχνίτης codd. χειρώναξ add. v32
52. τὸ (τὸ v32) ἐν τῷ χείμων v3 v22 R γενόμενον v3 R ἐν om. O P τῷ ῥωξί v1 v2 ῥοξί v1 Π τῶν δακτύλων om. v3 R τῶν δακτύλων ομ. v3 R τοῦ ποδὸς O P ἡ ἀποκαίμαστα post ἐλκος add. v3 R
54. χείριστα: δεινά, κάκιστα
55. χείριστον: χείρονα
56. χεδροπόνον: ὀστριον
57. χέλυς: κιθάρα
58. χελωνίδος: τοῦ ἄδου τῆς θύρας
59. χερμάδος: λιθοῦ πληροῦστος τῆν χειρά
60. χερνήτων: πενεχράν, [χερνὴν ἑγαζομένην,] ἀπὸ χερῶν ζώσαν, [ἐριουργόν]
61. χειμαρροὶ: βύκαις, ποταμοὶ
62. χερόνησια γῆ: ἡ εἰς θάλασσαν ἐκκενύουσα, ἡ μῆτε χέρος μῆτε θάλασσα, ἀλλὰ περικλυζομένη καὶ μίαν ἔχουσα διέξοδον
63. χερσία: ἐφημία
64. χείμα: ἑβύμα
65. χέραυ: γῆ
66. χεύματι: προχοβο: ἡ ἐκ δεξιῶν καὶ ἀριστέρων ἔχουσα θάλασσαν
67. χηλή: ὁ διηρημένος ὅνυξ τοῦ βοῶς]
68. χηλή: ὁπλή, ὅνυξ βοῶς καὶ προβάτου καὶ αἴγος· λέγεται δὲ καὶ τὰ τῶν θαλασσίων κορκίνων στόματα χηλαῖ
69. χηλή: ὅνυξ κτήνους

54. χειριστρα v1 χείρονα post κάκιστα add. V, κεχειρισμένα προ κάκιστα W
55. Gloss. om. V W χειριστρον F H, χειριστρον B C G χείρωνa v1 S Γ
56. χεδροπῶν S T U χεδροπον καὶ χέδροφ (χέρδοφ R) v3 R τὰ ἀσπρια v3
57. Gloss. om. Φ χέλυς V: χέλις vel χελύς cett. ἡ κιθάρα R
58. Gloss. om. Φ χελωνίδος v1 R S, χελονίδας v3 ἄδου vel ἄδου codd.; leg. οὔδοι τὰς θύρας v3 R T ἄδου τοῦ ἄδου L
59. Gloss. om. Φ χεῖρα nonnulli
62. χερωσσία v1 v2 R S T U χερωσσία Φ, χερωσσία Σ Π εἰς θάλ. (om. ἡ) v1 μήτε χέρος (om. ἡ) B U μὴ ἀνέχουσα v1 διέξοδον (ἐξόδον Σ) ἔχουσα v3 R
63. χείμα: βέιμα v1 N Γ
64. χέρος: γῆ V W
65. χέρος: γῆ v W
66. χεύματι U: χεύμαι cett. προχοβ cum lemm. nonnulli προχοβά Δ, προχοβής V W ἡ ante εἰς θ. om. P V W Γ
68. χηλή D M C V v32: χελή R Γ, χηλή cett. ὁ διηρημένος ὅνυξ τοῦ βοῶς (cf. gl. 67) ἡ ante ὁπλή add. v2 ἡ ὁπλή v1, ὁπλή nonnulli καὶ αἴγος om. v3 R καὶ ante τὰ om. Γ τὰ om. v22 Δ, ἡ πρὸ τὰ χαλαττεῖν v1 T τὰ στόματα v22 χείλαι
69. Gloss. om. v3 R S V W χηλή M. leg. χηλή
70. χηραμοι: οἱ φωλεὶς τῶν θηρίων, αἱ καταδύσεις τῶν θεων
71. χηρώσας: χήραν έάσας
[72. χηρώς: χηρείαν έάσας]
73. χθαμαλός: [χαμηλός,] ταπεινός, ὁμαλός, ἴσος
74. χθαμαλός: [ταπεινός,] χαμηλός
75. χθαμαλόν: ἄσθενες
76. χιθζοι: χθεινοί
77. χθονός: γῆς
78. χθονίως: γηνίως
79. χθιζός: χθεινός
80. χθόνος: γῆνως
81. χίδρα: [τρίψιμα, αἵτοι νέοι φρυττόμενος,] στάχυς νεογενῆς: ἣ τὰ ἑξ ὸσπρίων ὄλευρα [ἡ καὶ αὐτὰ τὰ ὀσπρια]
82. χίδρα ἐρικτά: ἐκ κριθῆς νέας ὡς σεμίδαις
83. χιλὸς: τροφὴ ἵππων
84. Χίμαιρα: τὸ τρίμορφον θηρίον ἐνταῦθα δηλοὶ, ὅπερ ἐν τῇ Δυκίᾳ ὑπῆρχεν

70. χηραμοι: οἱ φωλεὶς τῶν ὀφεων (tantum!) ι3 φωλεὶν v1, φωλαιοί Ν Ῥ Σ Τ Υ υ τῶν θηρίων, αἱ καταδύσεις om. R
71. Gloss. om. v2 v3 R χηράς v W
72. Gloss. om. v3 J K L R S T χηρῶς Μ v, Χηρῶς Ν v W, χηρᾶσα O P, χηρῶς v1, leg. χηράς χηράν v1 M N U W
73. χαμηλός hab. v1 v2; cett. om. χαμαλός v1 ὁμαλός ante ταπεινός Γ Δ ἴσος om. v1 ἣ ἄσθενες post ἴσος add. v W
74. Gloss. om. L O ταπεινός hab. v1 v2, cett. om. χαμηλοῖς om. v22 χαμαλός v1 Δ
75. Gloss. om. v W χθαλωά pro χθαμαλῶν v1
76. χθιζοί T U V: χθινοί v2 W, χθηνοί v1 S, χθιζοί v3 R χθηνοῖ v1, χθινοῖ v W ἄργοι ἄχρηστοι post χθηνοί add. T U (W)
77. Gloss. om v1 χθηνῶς T U, χθινός S
78. Gloss. om. J χθινίς ν2 R S T U V, χθινίς v1
79. Gloss. om. v3 R χθηζός v1
80. χθινοῖς S T U éπιγειοι add. W
81. Gloss. om. v32 leg. χίδρα τρίψιμα—φρυττόμενος om. Ρ Σ Δ Γ τρίψιμα Ο Ρ Τ: τρίψιμα v1, τρίψιμα cett. αἵτοι nonnulli φρυττόμενοι v1 ταχῖς v1 ἣ καὶ—διάπειρα hab. v1 v2, cett. om.
83. χλός Γ, χλόος R, χλόρος S καὶ ἵππων χρόνα add. v3 (exc. Γ)
84. Χίμαιραν v1 J K M N S (T) U, Χίμαιραν V (W), Χίμαιραν v3 τρόφυμον (R) (S) (T) U λυκία v1 N Γ
85. χίμαροι: τράγοι
86. χιονωθόσονται: λαμπρυνθόσονται
87. χίμαρα: αίγα αγρία
88. χίδρον: νέον καρπόν
89. χείλα: ἥ κατάδυσιν τοῦ ὀφέως
[90. χιδάλεως: τυφλόν, ἁγαμόν, πεθρυκός]
91. χιτών: ἐσθῆς, ἰμάτιον ἄνδρικόν
92. χλαίνα: χλαμύς, χλανίς, χειμερινόν ἰμάτιον πορφυρών
[93. χλεύη: χλευασμός, γέλος]
94. χληδώσα: τρυφώσα, σπαταλώσα
95. χλυδή: τρυφή
96. χλιδώνα: κόσμον περὶ τὸν τράχηλον ἡ βραχίων, ὁ καλεῖται βραχιόλιον
97. χλιδίζεσθαι: γαστρίζεσθαι
98. χλωαζεί: βλαστάνει
99. χνοῦς: λεπτὸς κοινορτός
100. χοίς: ἐναγίματα ἐπὶ νεκροῖς [εἰς τοὺς τάφους χεόμενα]
101. χόειον: παχὺ ἐντερον

85. Gloss. om. v22; cum gl. 61 conf. T U χίμαρροι vi J K W, χείμαρροι Γ, χείμαρροι Σ, χιμαρρον R χίμαρος: τράγος v32
86. χιονωθόσονται vi (exc. B) v3 Νο Rαc S, χιονωθόσονται Σ T
87. χιμαίρα (χιμαίρα B) vi αίγα (αίγα B) vi O P R αίξ L, αίγις v3 ἀγρία B ἢ ἐν χειμών παχύσασθαι χρήσασθαι post ἀγρία add. v3 χίμαρα: ἀγρία αίξ et χιμαίρα: αἰγίς ἀγρία περισσύν v W
88. Gloss. hab. χιδῶν
89. Gloss. om. v3 V W χεία Q P: χία Μ, χία cett.
90. Gloss. hab. vi; cett. om. πεθρυκός codd.
91. Gloss. om. v22 v32 χιτῶν vi T Τ Γ4, χιτῶν S ἐσθῆς vi T U ἰμάτιον R T Γ
92. Gloss. om. v3 χλαίνα, χλαμύς καὶ χλανίς: χλαίνα μὲν λέγεται τὸ παχὺ καὶ χιμέριον (μέμνον B) ἰμάτιον; χλαμύς δὲ τὸ παρ’ ἦμον λεγόμενον κυμάτιον; χλανίς (χλανίς B C G) δὲ τὸ ἄσπαλόν καὶ λεπτὸν (ἰμάτιον add. F H) καὶ τρυφερόν vi χλαίνα ὁ N O U V χλαίναν R πορφύρα χιμερινόν (καὶ χείμ. Ρ) ἰμάτιον R S
93. Gloss. hab. vi; cett. om. χλεύει codd. leg. γέλος
94. Gloss. om. vi χληδώσας: τρυφώσας, σπαταλώσας W
95. Gloss. om. vi χληδή R Γ
96. χιδώνα vi Ν, χλιδώνα (χιλιδώνα Γ) v3 τράχηλον ἢ om. W, sed supra lineam ἢ τῶν τράχηλον add. τῶν om. R βραχιόλιος Γ, βραχιόλιον R S, βραχίωνος Φ, βραχιόλιον Λ, βραχιόλιον καὶ βραχιόλιον W
98. χλωαζεί vi
99. χνοῦς vi M V W
100. χοίς v22 L: χοίς cett. ἐναγίματα vi Ν νεκροῖς R εἰς—χεόμενα om. v3 R ἢ τῶν τάφους S
101. χορίον Ο P, leg. χόριον παχὺ Ο P, ταχὺ W
102. χονδρίτην: παχύ σεμιδάλις γινομένη
103. χοικός: γγγηνής, εκ χοώς, πήλινος
104. χωόμενος: λυπούμενος, ὁργιζόμενος
105. χοιράδες: πετρών ὀψθοι ἢ ἐξοχαί
106. χοτ: χώματι
107. χοργαγριλλίος: [ἄρκομυς], ὠστρίξ, εἴδος λαγωοῦ
108. χολέσαιμι: ἀν: ὁργιαθήσομαι
109. χολέρα: [ἀνωθεὶ καὶ κάτωθεν ἔμετος, ἦτουν] ἐκκρίσις διὰ στόματος καί γαστρός
110. χολάδες: ἐντερα
111. χονδροί ἀλών: θρόμβοι ἀλατος, παχὺ ἀλας
112. χορηγία: δόσις, παροχή
113. χοροστάτης: χοροὺ κατάρχων
114. χόριον: τὸ κάλυμμα τὸ συγγεννώμενον ἐν τῇ κολία τοῖς βρέφεσι
115. χορός: κύκλος, στέφανος
116. χόδος: μέτρον εἶρητι δὲ καὶ τὸ χῶμα
117. χράνας: μιάνας, ρυπώσας
118. χραισμεῦν: βοηθεῖν
119. χραισμητός: βοηθήσαι

102. Gloss. om. Π χονδρίτην Σ: χονδρίτον ν3 R S (T) U, χονδρίτον V W χονδριτῶν vel χονδρίτων ν1 ν2 σεμιδάλις ν1, σεμιδάλις R, γινομένη R S U Σ Φ, γινομένης T
103. γγγηνής nonnulli πήλινος ἢν ν3
104. χωόμενος V W: χωόμενος cett. ἐργαζόμενος ν1
105. Gloss. om. Φ χοτ: F N T U χώματα V W
107. χολέσαιμεν R Ρ, χολέσαιμα ν3 R Ρ ὀργιαθήσαμαι ν1 ἢν post ὄργ. add. O P
108. χολερά L T V W, χολερά R S U ἀνωθεὶ—ήτουν om. ν3 RS ἔμετος ν2 V W, αἴμετος ν1 T (U) εἶτου V, ἠγοῦν W ἐκκρίσεις J M N R, ἐκκρίσεις ν1
109. χόλαδες vel χολάδες ν1 θρόμβοι post ἐντερα add. ν1
110. χονδριδαίων S (T) U Γ Π, χονδριδαίων R ἀλών nonnull, ἀλός V W θρόμβοι om ν1 (cf. gloss. praec.) ἀλατος om. W, ἀλατος . . . ἀλας nonnulli
111. δώσις S, δώσι R
112. χοροκαταδέχονταν ν1
114. μέτρον—χῶμα (= gl. sequ.) add. ν3
115. Gloss. om. V
116. ρυπώσας Κ O R T Δ
117. χραισμεῦσαι ν1 N S βοηθήσαι nonnulli
120. χρηματίσαι: κράζει ώς ἵππος [ἢ ἀντὶ τοῦ λαλῆσαι εἰρήται]
121. χρέμπτεται: [θῆσει, οἶνον] ἥχου τῷ στόματι ἀποτελεῖ, πτέρνεται
122. χρεώμενος: χραίμενος
123. χρεών ἀποκοπαί: ὅταν τὰ υπὸ τῶν πενήτων ἀφαιρεθέντα ἀφεῖσαν λάβωσιν
124. χρηματισμὸς: ἢ τῶν ἰππῶν φωνή
[125. χραισμόν, ἔχραισμον]
126. χρήμα: πράγμα, πλοῦτος, οὐσία, λήμμα
127. χρηματίζει: ἀποκρίνεται, προλέγει, [προφητεύει ἢ πρόσει: χρήμα γὰρ τὸ πράγμα]
128. χρησιμοδοτούμενα: [μαντεύμενα], προλεγόμενα
129. χρησιμὸν: προφητείαν, [κληρόν, μαντεῖαν]
130. χρηστοῦν: ἀγαθοὶ
131. χρήστης: ὁ δανείζων καὶ δανείζόμενος
132. χρησθαί: χράσθαι, προσφέρεσθαι
133. χρέμπτεται: [προσκνάται,] πελάζει, προσεγγίζει
134. χρόος ἀσάμην: τοῦ σώματος ἐκορεθήσθην
135. χρυσότευκτος: ἐκ χρυσοῦ κατασκευασμένος
136. χρυσηλακάτου: χρυσοτόξου

———

120. χραμάτωσει (J) K L M N R U, χραμάτωσε O P S T Σ, χρηματίσει v1 ἢ—εἰρήται
om. v3, v4
cett. βίβεξεi οἶνον om. v3 R S W βίβεξε V: βίβεξε v2 FH, βίβεξε B C G (T) Y U οἶνον nonnulli τὸ πρὸ τῷ B C G O S Γ ἢ πτέρνεται v1, πτέρνεται v3 122. Gloss. om. L χραίμωσει v22 W Σ: χραίμωσεις cett. χρόμωσις R T U
123. ἀντὶ πρὸ ὁποι v3 R S λάβοι ἢ nonnulli
124. χραματονόμοι v1 v2 (T) U ἢ πρόων τῶν ἰππῶν v3
125. Gloss. hab. v1 v2; cett. om. οἶχρασομον Ο Ρ, ἐξχρασομον v1
126. χρήμα v1, N πράγμα nonnulli πλοῦτος ἢ πράγμα v1 ὀλὴ χρυσόν ἢ πράγμα ἢ ἄνω
add. v3 R οὖν om. v32 λήμμα nonnulli
127. χρήσιμαι Γ Ν, χρησιμεῖται v32 προφητεύει—πράγμα om. v3 W ἢ προφητεύει RS τὸ
om. S T U V χρήμα γὰρ: πράγμα γὰρ Ῥ
128. μαντεύμενον om. v3 R W προλεγόμενον ἢ ἀντὶ μαντ. v2 S
129. χρησμός v3 R S (T) U W προφητεία v3 R S W ἢ θεοφανεῖα πρὸ κληρών, μαντεῖαν v3 R, ἢ δῆλωσι W, κληρών v1, κληρών O P, κληρών S T V μαντεῖα S
130. χρηστόν: ἄγαθον v W ἢ ἄγαθοι v3 ἢ ἄγαθοι post ἄγαθοι add. J;
131. χρηστός v3 ἢ ἄνωτής οὐδὲ ἀνωτῆς W ... δανείζόμενοι nonnulli
132. χρήσαι om. v1 χρείσαι v3 O P V προφητεύει ἢ κράζει ἢ προφητεύει v3 R proph-
133. χρήσαται v3 O P T V W, χρήσηται v1, χρήσηται N προσκνάται om. v3 R προσ-πελάζεις T U, προσπελάται v3 R ἢ προσκνάται v3 R
134. χρώσις Π Φ, χρώσις R, χρώσις v1 v2, χρώσιμον T U, χρώσιμον V (W)
135. χρυσώτευκτος v1, χρυσώτευκτος Τ Φ χρυσωτό W κατασκευασμένοι nonnulli
136. χρυσηλακάτου C F H N Π, χρυσηλακάτω B G ἄλλαχοι γράτεται χρυσηλακάτου add. W
143. χύδεων R κεχυμένος B C G Π ὡς ἐτύχει om. v3 W, ἐτύχου V
144. χυδαίος nonnulli, χύδεος (R) S (T) οὐ εὐτελῆς v1 N T Π Φ συφέτος om. v3, συφέτος v1 πανπληθῆς pro συφέτος W
146. Gloss. om. P o ἐκπαιμός v3
147. Gloss. om. P σιέλος Λ Ω V: σιέλος cett. ἄλλαχοι πτέμα ὑγρόν add. W
149. ὅπερ codd.; leg. ὅπερ πολεμικό v1 πολυορκίας nonnulli προσχῶν F H, προσχούντα B G τείχει B C G S ἄλλαχοι εἰώθαν προσχοῦν τὰ τείχη add. W
150, 151. om. v3 v4
152. χώρος v1 Ν: ὁ τόπος v3
153. Gloss. om. Σ χωρήσατε v1 v21, χωρήσαται T, χωρήσασαι Π Φ προσδεξασθαι v1 v3 (exc. δ) v22 R S T W
B F G H
155. Gloss. om. v3 L W
156. χώτα: σῶμα
157. χωλαβεῖ: θορυβεῖ
158. χώρος: χωρίον. Κύπριοι ὄπην. δῆλοι δὲ καὶ τὸν ἀγρόν· καὶ χωρητικόν

156. Gloss. om. ν3 L R S W χώτα vel χώτα codd.; leg. χρώτα
158. Gloss. hab. vi; cett. om. χώρος codd. καὶ κύπριοι F H χωρητικόν F H, χωρητικόν B C G
Method and Structure in the Satires of Persius

EDWIN S. RAMAGE

Over the last twenty years or so, Persius' satiric approach and method have attracted considerable scholarly attention, but one aspect of the satires that has not been adequately studied is Persius' use of the second person address. This is a one-on-one approach in which the satirist speaks in the first person to, with, or at a variety of second persons. The device is so much a part of Persius' method that our natural reaction is to take it for granted as we read, at most ascribing it to the influence of the Cynic–Stoic diatribe. But a closer look suggests its importance for the argumentation, poetic development, and structure of the individual satires, as well as for the general impression that the poems leave.

THE METHOD IN THE SATIRES

Persius addresses at least four different groups of second persons in his satires. First, and least important for our purposes, is a category that includes gods (2.39 f., 3.35–37), priests (2.69), and well-known people from the past (1.73–75, 1.87, 1.115, 6.79 f.), where the poet is aiming for vividness, variety, and emphasis. A second kind of addressee is Persius' reader or listener. He does not speak directly to his reader very often, but it should be noticed that when he does, the satirist makes him the second person subject of the verb credo (Prol. 14; 4.1). More important is what might be called the address to a friend—Macrinus in Satire 2, Cornutus in 5, and Bassus in 6—which the satirist inherited from the earlier satiric and epistolary traditions. We shall look at these more closely later, but two points should be made here: Persius never addresses a friend without \footnote{Most of the bibliography since 1956 is gathered together in U. Knoche (transl. E. S. Ramage), Roman Satire (Bloomington, 1975), pp. 207 f., 224–226; see also p. 170, n. 19. At least three other studies should be added to those listed there: F. Villeneuve, Essai sur Persé (Paris, 1918); E. V. Marmorale, Persius (Florence, 1956); J. C. Bramble, Persius and the Programmatic Satire (Cambridge, 1974).}

naming him, and Macrinus, Cornutus, and Bassus all appear at the beginning of their satires and all quickly disappear.\(^2\)

But the most common and most important addressee in these poems is the vague, unnamed second person to whom the poet as satirist/adviser (s/a) directs much of his criticism and advice. It predominates in the satires, occurring almost 80 percent of the time, and for this reason deserves our close attention here.

Both s/a and second person recipient remain unnamed throughout, except for an episode in Satire 4 involving Socrates and Alcibiades (1–22), which, as we shall see, is a well-motivated variation on the theme. While we do not need to be told who the s/a is, the recipient remains as vague as possible. In fact, there are two points at which the poet shows that he is consciously maintaining this vagueness. In the first satire, where the recipient is present throughout, the s/a at one point (44) prefaces a comment to him with the words, “Whoever you are whom I have just set speaking against me, . . .” The fact that the comment begins a speech and that the words neatly fill a line help to make the statement stand out. Persius is telling us here that the adversary or recipient is a vague second person “straw man” and that the poem is really not a dialogue at all.\(^3\) The second instance occurs in Satire 6 (41 f.), when the s/a begins his address to the heir who becomes the recipient at this point: “But as for you, whoever you are who will be my heir, . . .”

There is at least one instance in which the satirist promotes this ambiguity by shifting suddenly from the second person singular to the plural and back again. This happens in the third satire (63–76), where the recipient begins as a singular (64: videas) and in the same line becomes a plural (occurretis). The plural is maintained in the imperatives discite and cognoscite (66), but the next reference, some five lines later, is singular (71: te), and so are those in the next two lines (72: locatus es; 73: disce nec invideas), where invideas recalls videas at the beginning. This intentional mixing of singular and plural seems intended to generalize the recipient still further. Not only is he unnamed and vague, then, but he is even singular or plural.\(^4\)

\(^2\) Macrinus disappears after 2.4 and Bassus is not referred to again after 6.6, so that these dedications appear almost perfunctory. We naturally contrast them with the more elaborate address to Cornutus in Satire 5 (19–64).

\(^3\) Although he does not use this line as evidence, G. L. Hendrickson, some forty years ago, observed that this satire is not a dialogue: “The First Satire of Persius,” C.P. 23 (1928), 103.

\(^4\) There are other examples in Satire 1 that are not quite parallel to this one. At 1.11 a plural ignoscite suddenly appears; in 1.61 f. there is a shift from the singular recipient to a plural recipient, the patricians; at 1.111 f., after moving to the plural (111: eritis), the poet shifts back to the singular (112: inquis).
Generally speaking, however, the satirist simply takes full advantage of the natural vagueness of the second personal verb or pronoun when it is not related to a subject or antecedent.

What is the result of this one-on-one approach? In the first place, it helps create a strongly didactic atmosphere. It is almost a tutorial situation, with the s/a offering criticism and advice to a recipient who apparently needs it. When he wants to use examples, the s/a brings them in via the first person plural and the third person singular and plural.5

There are other indications of a didactic purpose in the satires. The third satire is really a statement of the need for a proper education and the right application of it. "You're just damp, soft clay," the s/a tells his recipient: "Now, right now, you have to be whirled around on the swift wheel and shaped without stopping" (3.23 f.). In the first line of the fourth satire Socrates, the s/a, is called a magister or "teacher." Throughout the satires vocabulary of teaching and learning is used by the s/a in addressing the recipient, much of it in the imperative.6 And there are many jussives and imperatives that are natural components of the language of teaching.7 All of these combine to produce the heavily didactic atmosphere that pervades the satires.

This emphasis on the one-on-one relationship between s/a and recipient also helps to produce an atmosphere of isolation in the satires. These two

5 It is important to notice that Persius never admits directly to having faults (see also below, note 13). He does, however, include himself in the first person plural where he effectively dilutes his own shortcomings by making them part of humanity’s. For want of a better designation we shall call this the collective "we." Examples: 1.13: scribimus, where the context has already told us that he is actually not part of this group; 2.62 and 71: nostros, damus, in a passage where the s/a ends up being the proper example (75); 3.3, 12, 14, and 16: stertimus, querimur, querimur, venimus, where, pace Housman (see below, note 13), Persius is at best one of a group of "sinners"; 4.42 f.: caedimus, praebemus, novimus, where we hardly think of the s/a as being included; 5.68: consumpsimus, where the criticism really involves the procrastinators, and not the s/a.

The third person examples are too easily recognized to need elaboration. They range all the way from a centurion (3.77) or centurions (5.189) to individuals putting forward the wrong prayers (2.8-14).

6 There is a surprisingly large number of examples: 1.30, 2.31, 5.68: ecece ("look!" "look here!"); 2.17: age, responde ("come, answer me this!" a Socratic touch); 2.42, 6.52: age ("come now!"); 3.66: discite . . . cognoscite ("learn!" "get to know!"); 3.73, 5.91: discite ("learn!"); 4.3, 6.51: dic ("tell me!" another Socratic touch); 4.52: noris ("get to know!"); 6.42: audi ("listen!").

7 The satires contain many of these; a few examples will suffice: 1.5-7: non . . . accedas examene . . . castiges . . . nec . . . quasiuevis; 6.25 f.: messe tenuus prupria vive et granaria (fas est) | enole; 6.63: fuge quaerere. Satire 4 contains no fewer than twelve imperatives and jussives. The ones involving the recipient are listed in note 6. The others with didactic overtones include 19 f.: expecta, i, suffla (ironic); 45: da, decipe (also ironic); 51 f.: respue, tollat, habita.
participants are constantly and consistently separated from the rest of society, except when they are included in the general or collective “we” of the Roman or Italian populace, or of humanity in general. They also leave the impression of being isolated because “we,” “he,” and “they” that make up the rest of society provide the negative examples that the s/a chooses for his recipient.

This theme of isolation runs through the satires. In fact, Persius sets the mood in the Prologue by candidly separating himself from poets and poetry of the past, and by rejecting his contemporaries. This rejection is developed at length in the first satire. The satirist will have nothing to do with contemporary literature, whose depravities reflect those of contemporary society; he ostensibly cares little about a reading public (2 f., 119 f.); he professes to have no worries about the effect his satire is having (110–114); he recommends isolation to his recipient (5–7); and he even describes the important message that he has as something “hidden” (1.121: opertum).

Again, in Satire 5, after rejecting contemporary pretentiousness yet another time, Persius says he is speaking privately (5.21). Toward the beginning of Satire 6 we find that he has physically isolated himself from Rome and Romans by moving to his country estate and that he wants to make sure that we and Bassus know this. “Here I am free and safe from the mob,” he says (6.12), and he repeats the adjective securus in the next line. The same desire for seclusion appears a little later, when the s/a overtly takes his heir to one side to make certain that he listens to what he is saying (6.42: paulum a turba seductior audi). Horace gets caught in the Roman Forum (Sat. 1.9) or bustling about Rome (Sat. 2.6.20–58); Juvenal stands on the street corner taking notes (Sat. 1.63 f.); Persius carefully takes his heir into a quiet corner to talk to him.

A third purpose that the use of the s/a and recipient accomplishes is to focus attention on the individual. In this connection, there is an important statement early in the first satire that should probably be taken as programmatic for the satires as a whole (5–7). When the discussion of contemporary literature has barely begun, the s/a turns to his recipient and says, “If Rome in its confused state disparages something, don’t run up and fix the balance that’s out of kilter and don’t go looking for anything that’s outside yourself.” There may be a rejection of society here, but it is not complete nihilism, for, negative and sententious though the statement may appear, it is Persius’ way of saying that if we are going to have faith in anything, it should be the individual.

8 See above, note 5. Though the immediate situation is quite different, we can feel these isolationist tendencies in Persius’ description of his friendship with Cornutus (5.19–51). What he has in effect done is to set up another one-on-one relationship with Cornutus. See the analysis of Satire 5, below.

9 In a general article on the subject, Anderson shows that Persius rejects society and that this is a point of view quite different from that of the other satirists: W. S. Anderson, “Persius and the Rejection of Society,” in Wissenschaftl. Zeitschr. der Univ. Rostock 15 (1966), 409–416.

As we make our way through the satires, we find the individual to the forefront most of the time. In the first satire Persius by himself opposes popular opinion, taste, and mores. Private or individual prayers are the subject of Satire 2, where the s/a alone is represented as having the solution (75). Satire 3 deals with the education and improvement of the individual. Here the metaphor from pottery making (23 f.) quoted earlier is particularly apt, since pots are turned one at a time. The eloquent list of things to be learned that appears a little later in the poem (66–72), to a large extent involves matters of one’s own worth and personal identity. There is no need to stress the emphasis on the individual that permeates the fourth satire, with its exhortation to “know thyself.” The last two lines (51 f.) provide an eloquent summary: “Reject what you are not; have the mob take back its favors. Live with yourself and come to realize how sparse your furnishings are.” In Satire 5 (52 f.) Persius expresses a clear recognition of the individual: “There are a thousand kinds of men and their experience differs widely. Everyone has his own desires and people don’t live with a single prayer.” This is an appropriate preamble to the subject of the satire, which is the nature of personal freedom. Finally, Satire 6 focuses on the proper attitude of the individual to wealth.

The one-on-one relationship between s/a and recipient reinforces this emphasis in the satires, for it is a practical example of how the education or enlightenment of the individual might take place. Actually, it is one end of the spectrum—the beginning of the educational process. The other end is represented by the relationship between Persius and Cornutus (5.19–64). This personal association has grown over a long period of time, from vague and tenuous beginnings to an ideal, clearly defined partnership for life based on mutual respect.

The one-on-one device that we have been talking about serves yet another purpose: it focuses our attention on the s/a and his criticism or advice. He is forceful, positive, and outspoken; generally he speaks with conviction. The recipient, on the other hand, is thoroughly vague, and most of the time blends into the surrounding scenery because he is simply a tacit listener. But even when he has a larger part to play, as he does in the first satire, he is little more than a straw man presenting maudlin, wrong, or at least unacceptable sentiments, which are ultimately grist for the critical mill of his opponent. And here is another reason for our focusing on the s/a. The recipient is actually a negative character who has gone wrong in his actions or thinking or who threatens to go wrong. There is no need to dwell on this; we need only think of the adversary in Satire 1, Alcibiades in 4, or the heir in 6. By contrast, the s/a is assumed to be or is represented as the positive example of what he is promoting. This clearly lies behind the argument of Satire 1, coming to a climax in the last monologue (114-134). At the end of Satire 2 we catch sight of the s/a as the one who is ideally prepared to make a proper prayer. By associating himself with Cornutus in 5 Persius shows he is the ideal sapiens, and we cannot forget this as we read the rest of the poem containing his account of true individual freedom. In Satire 6 he appears both as one who knows how to utter a proper prayer (22) and as a person who is fully aware of the proper use of money (12-24, 25-80, esp. 41-74).

There is a final purpose that this device seems to serve. It is apparently a way of bringing in the reader and thus providing a more general application of the criticism and advice that is being put forward. Persius nowhere states that this is his purpose, but it is a natural reaction on the part of the reader or listener to take much of what is directed at a vague "you" as being directed beyond the satires to himself.

Before turning to the individual satires to see how the one-on-one method works out in practice, something must be said about origins. This is not the place to get into a long discussion of where Persius found the device and how he adapted it to his own uses. For present purposes it will be sufficient to point to the Cynic–Stoic diatribe as the most likely source. Even a glance at the reported diatribes of Epictetus suggests clear comparisons.

11 The beginning of Satire 3 presents a problem if we take the young man who is snoring his life away as being Persius. But see note 13.

12 Cf. Villeneuve (above, note 1), pp. 119-140, 154-184. Diatribe had influenced Roman satire from the beginning. The few remaining fragments of Ennius' satires show traces of it (Knoche [above, note 1], pp. 25, 29; Ramage, Sigsbee, Fredericks [above, note 10], pp. 19, 20), and so do the more extensive remains of Lucilius (Ramage, Sigsbee, Fredericks, pp. 34, 35, 40, 43).

Horace makes use of the diatribe, but his approach is quite different from that of Persius. It appears in five satires only (1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2.3, and 2.7). In the first three satires there is a clearer alternation between third person examples and direct address to the recipient. While the recipient is the focus of Horace's attention, the one-on-one relationship is not as tight as it is in Persius, and we do not feel the same isolation that the s/a and recipient in Persius leave. In 2.3 and 2.7 Horace is to a large extent satirizing the
THE STRUCTURE OF THE SATIRES

A detailed look at each of the poems will give a better idea of the part that the s/a and his recipient have to play in Persius' satires. For purposes of clarity the analysis of each satire, with one exception, is prefaced by an outline in which not only passages involving the s/a and recipient are taken into account, but also those in which Persius uses address to a friend, the collective "we," the third person, or an impersonal approach. Satire I will be left to the end, since our examination of it will benefit from looking at the other satires first.

SATIRE TWO

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lines</th>
<th>Method</th>
<th>Subject</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1-4</td>
<td>address to friend</td>
<td>Macrinus’ birthday</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5-14</td>
<td>third sing.</td>
<td>improper prayers: examples</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15-60</td>
<td>s/a-recip.</td>
<td>prayers: problem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>61-70</td>
<td>impersonal</td>
<td>generalization of problem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>71-75</td>
<td>coll. &quot;we&quot;;</td>
<td>solution: general and personal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>s/a alone</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

As has already been noted, the satire begins with a second personal address to a friend, Macrinus, who disappears immediately after Persius' observation that his friend is not in the habit of uttering improper prayers (4). This leads naturally to a series of examples of such prayers (5-14), all of them in the third person (5: bona pars procerum; 6: cuivis; 9: illa). The examples are an important introduction to the problem, but the passage also serves another function. The heavy emphasis on the third person singular—all the verbs but two (13: impello, expungam) are in this form, and these two are part of the direct quotation from a third person—provides a kind of buffer between the address to Macrinus and that to the recipient which follows. As we shall see, this occurs again in a different form in Satires 5 and 6.

Immediately after this list of prayers (15) the s/a suddenly turns to his vague, unnamed recipient and begins the discussion that takes up most diatribe method as he satirizes the philosophy that spawned it. Here the one-on-one is quite different, for both s/a and recipient are named, and in both cases Horace the recipient turns the tables on the s/a at the end of the satire. The strong element of burlesque and humor in both satires should also not be overlooked.
of the rest of the satire. This falls into three parts, thus helping to avoid the tedium of a lengthy tirade. The s/a first adopts a Socratic style and puts before his recipient a series of probing questions on attitudes to the gods (17–30). He then turns to the example of the maternal aunt, using a prefacesing ecce to draw his discussant’s attention (and ours, too) to her and her prayers (31–40). Finally he returns, in a long section, to point out how wrong his adversary is to wish for a long life and great wealth, and how his materialistic outlook has affected his treatment of the gods (41–60). This arrangement not only provides the variety already mentioned, but it also enables Persius to get at the problem from a number of different angles.

The problem is now consciously generalized (61–70) with an address to souls in general (61), the use of iuvat (62) and the collective “we” (62: nostras), and the concentration on pulpa or “flesh” (63–68). By contrast, the solution is put in terms of the collective “we” (71: damus), which is actually a step on the way to the first person of the satirist or s/a who represents the right solution on a personal level (75).

Persius seems to have planned his use of the s/a-recipient in Satire 2 very carefully, since he makes it physically its centerpiece. Here as elsewhere this device is used to develop an account of the problem, and the return of the s/a in the last line of the satire serves to remind us of the method and the problem as the personal solution is presented.

Satire Three

Lines | Method | Subject
---|---|---
1–14 | coll. “we” (s/a-recip.)— | improper living: example
| coll. “we” | | |
15–62 | s/a-recip. | education: problem
63–76 | s/a-recip. | education: solution
77–118 | third sing.—s/a-recip. | three sceptical attitudes

This is a difficult poem and its difficulties are reflected in its structure. Persius deals here with the need for a proper philosophical education and the right application of it. He begins by using what appears to be the collective “we” (3: stertimus) to describe an example—the person who reveals a lack of direction and purpose in his life by spending his time carousing and sleeping it off. Almost immediately one of his companions (7) addresses him in a variation of the one-on-one approach (5: en quid agis?). The poet then moves back to the collective first person to elaborate the problems of those who cannot get down to writing but instead spend their time inventing excuses (12, 14: querimur).

This introduction is followed by a long passage containing a broader discussion of the problem (15–62) and a solution (63–76) in which the s/a addresses the vague second person recipient throughout. The collective "we" appears at the beginning (16: venimus), along with the vocative address to the recipient (15: miser . . . miser), to provide a bridge between the two parts. The s/a points first to the need for a proper philosophical education (15–34; esp. 23 f.), and then turns from his recipient for a moment to address Jupiter as he points out the ramifications of not having such training (35–43). There is no indication that the recipient is being spoken to as the speaker moves on to make the point that early in life a person cannot really be expected to know what is proper (44–51), but it is clear that he has been addressing the recipient, because he suddenly points a finger at him and chides him for having had the training, but still not knowing how to live (52–62). With stertis (58) and the rest of this line and the next, the s/a gives every indication of returning to the point at which the satire began, when he suddenly generalizes the discussion by asking the recipient whether he has any purpose in life or whether he is simply "playing it by ear" (60–62: . . . ex tempore vivis?).

He now turns to the solution or cure for the problem that he has outlined (63–76), with elleborum, the first word in the passage, metaphorically announcing the topic. These lines have already been discussed, and we need only remind ourselves of the interplay of singular and plural, and the heavy didacticism that run through them.

To this point Satire 3 has followed the pattern of the second satire:

13 More than sixty years ago A. E. Housman suggested that Persius had himself in mind at the beginning of Satire 3 ("Notes on Persius," C.Q. 7 [1913], 16 f.). Although G. L. Hendrickson calls it "fanciful" but "by no means impossible" ("The Third Satire of Persius," C.P. 23 [1928], 333), the view has been widely accepted, most recently by R. Jenkinson ("Interpretations of Persius' Satires III and IV," Latomus 32 [1973], 534 f.). But if this is Persius in these lines, then, as has already been pointed out, it is the only place in the satires where the satirist appears in a negative light (see above, note 5). The personal account a little later (44–51) does not militate against this, since Persius points out that he was young (44: parus) when he tricked his teacher and that this kind of thing was only to be expected (48: iure) at that age. It might also be argued that the first person plural (3: stertimus) softens the connection, serving as a collective "we" (see above, note 5) and so making Persius at best just one of humanity that is in the habit of sleeping away its life. Indeed, the recurrence of the first person plural (12, 14, 16) helps to leave the impression throughout these lines that Persius does not have himself in mind, but people in general. It is true that the unnamed companion does address the snorer or one of the snorers in the second person singular (5: quid agis?); but this should not bother us, since it is a variation of the s/a-recipient arrangement, with the companion playing the s/a, and we would expect the recipient to be unnamed.
example(s), general discussion of the problem, and solution. But no two satires of Persius are alike, and, besides, this tripartite arrangement is more characteristic of philosophy than it is of satire. And so the satire ends with three examples of people who for one reason or another are not receptive to the advice which Persius has given. A large cross section of the population simply closes its ears to the whole idea (77–87). Another person takes the advice so long as it is expedient and then forgets about it, so that he represents the group that has the answers but refuses to use them (88–106). A third type honestly believes it does not need this kind of direction (107–118). The first two examples are in the third person and the last one promises to take this form also. But the direct quotation (107–109) is actually a transition between the previous two examples and the negative ending, where the s/a returns to speak to his recipient once again and tells him how failure to get and use this proper direction is ultimately a form of insanity. The reference to Stoicism is clear, but the satire ends on a satiric, and not a philosophic note.

Satire Four

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lines</th>
<th>Method</th>
<th>Subject</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1–22</td>
<td>s/a-recip. (Socrates and Alcibiades)</td>
<td>lack of self-knowledge: example</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23–50</td>
<td>s/a-recip.</td>
<td>self-knowledge: problem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>51 f.</td>
<td>s/a-recip.</td>
<td>self-knowledge: solution</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The whole of the fourth satire is developed by means of the s/a-recipient method, with the poet using two sets of discussants. Socrates is the s/a addressing Alcibiades, the recipient, for the first twenty-two lines, and then the unnamed s/a and vague recipient take over. In the first section, a Greek atmosphere is maintained by a careful scattering of Greek words and names: Perici (3), theta (13), Anticyras (16), Dinomaches (20: with a Greek genitive ending), Baucis (21), ocima (22). The second section, on the other hand, is full of Roman words, things, and ideas: Vettidi (25), Curibus (26), genio (27), compita (28), balteus (44), puteal (49). This is not to say that the division of words is strictly maintained, for nothing is ever that simple in Persius. The division, however, does exist.

---

14 Words with Roman connotations appear in the first section (plebecula [6], Quirites [8], popello [15]), thus keeping Rome in sight. D. Bo observes that Persius "res tia agit ac suo more novat ut haud raro potius Romae quam Athenis esse videamur et quemdam stoicum philosophum, Seneca seriorem, audire Neronem monentem, . . . " (A. Persi Flacci saturarum liber [Turin, 1969], p. 70). The most obvious examples of Greek words in the second section are gausope (37) and palaesritra (39).

15 The general statement that suddenly appears at 23 f. signals the new section, and the rest of the satire proceeds from this. Persius does much the same thing in Satire 5,
This variation of the one-on-one approach involving Socrates and Alcibiades serves as a specific example of the problem under discussion, that is, the importance of getting to know oneself. Normally Persius would make Alcibiades the subject of a third person statement, but here he has chosen to vary his method. When we realize this, it becomes clear that this satire shows much the same development in content as the second satire and the first seventy-six lines of Satire 3. A more general discussion of the problem (23-50) is prefaced by a universal statement (23 f.) and leads eventually to a collective “we” (42 f.). The final two lines of the satire give the solution, this time in an imperative form addressed to the recipient.

Satire Five

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lines</th>
<th>Method</th>
<th>Subject</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1-4</td>
<td>impersonal</td>
<td>desire for eloquence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5-18</td>
<td>s/a (Cornutus?)-recip. (Persius)</td>
<td>P. has his own eloquence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19-64</td>
<td>address to friend</td>
<td>eloquent tribute to C.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>64-72</td>
<td>s/a-recip.</td>
<td>call to philosophy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>73-90</td>
<td>third sing. (traces of s/a-recip.)</td>
<td>true freedom misconceived: example</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>91-160</td>
<td>s/a-recip.</td>
<td>true freedom: problem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>161-175</td>
<td>s/a-recip.</td>
<td>true freedom: solution</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>176-191</td>
<td>s/a-recip.</td>
<td>examples of a lack of freedom</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The fifth satire is often pointed to as the most successful of Persius’ satires, and this is reflected in the methods he uses. A glance at the summary above shows a satisfying variety of approach in which content and method blend to produce a unity for the poem.

The opening statement (1-4) is mildly surprising on two counts: it is completely impersonal and might be taken as an exaggerated plea for eloquence. But when we remember what Persius has said about contemporary poets and their poetry in his Prologue and in Satire 1, the overtones of irony that are present in these lines begin to make themselves felt.

Suddenly someone begins criticizing this demand for a hundred voices, mouths, and tongues as the satirist develops a variation of the one-on-one technique (5-18). Here Persius becomes the unnamed recipient, while it appears that Cornutus is the s/a.16 This substitution is thoroughly appropriate, since, as we learn a little later, the relationship between Cornutus and Persius has been one of teacher (adviser) and student (recipient).

Now follows an address to a friend, with Persius speaking directly to Cornutus (19–64). The poet wants his eloquence so that he can praise Cornutus (19–29), and he proceeds to do so pointing to their close friendship (30–51) and to the fact that Cornutus’ chosen profession is philosophical teaching (52–64).

At this point Persius becomes the s/a and turns smoothly to address children and old men—in other words, everyone—as second person recipients, telling them to seek their knowledge from Cornutus and bridling at their procrastination (64–72). The plural (64: petite) effectively separates this group from Cornutus who has just been addressed in the second person singular, but hinc (64) provides a connection between teacher and potential students. Soon the s/a chooses one of this group to set up the one-on-one method that he uses in attacking procrastination (68: ecce; 70: te; 71: sectabere; 72: curras). It is worth noting that Cornutus has by now disappeared entirely from the satire.

As Persius turns to discuss true freedom—presumably because this is an important example of the kind of thing people should learn about—he begins with a brief general statement of the need for it (73) and goes on from there to talk about misconceptions that people have (73–90). This passage is largely in the third person, but there are hints at an s/a-recipient relationship in two of the verbs (79 f.: recesas . . . tu; . . . palles) and in the Stoic who speaks to an unnamed associate (85: colligis; 87: tolle). Lines 64–90 not only further the argument of the satire, but they also serve as an effective buffer between the address to a friend (19–64) and the long passage in which the s/a speaks to his recipient about freedom (91–191). We have already noticed this kind of buffer in Satire 2 and we will find it again in the sixth satire.

At this point the satire moves to the one-on-one method, and this fills the last one-hundred lines of the poem. Within the overall s/a-recipient arrangement there are a number of variations on the theme. For the first forty lines the s/a speaks directly to his second person recipient (91–131). Then, still speaking to him, he replaces himself first with Avaritia (132–140), and then with Luxuria (141–153), each of whom addresses the recipient from her own point of view. In the next few lines the s/a speaks directly to the recipient again (154–160) and after this introduces a scene from comedy to illustrate the process of achieving true freedom (161–175). We should remember that the s/a and recipient are still present, but they have been replaced “on stage” by Davus and Chaerestratus, respectively. Finally the s/a reappears speaking directly to the recipient as he provides him with more negative examples (176–191). As we look back over the satire, we see that the real subject of the poem is treated in much the same way as it had been in Satires 2, 3, and 4: specific example(s) (73–90), discussion of the problem (91–160), a solution (161–175), with the satiric ending reminding us of Satire 3.

Satire Six

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lines</th>
<th>Method</th>
<th>Subject</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1–11</td>
<td>address to a friend</td>
<td>Bassus and Persius away from Rome</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12–24</td>
<td>s/a (Persius)</td>
<td>proper attitude to wealth: example</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25–40</td>
<td>s/a to recip.</td>
<td>improper attitude to wealth:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(legator)</td>
<td>solution, example</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>41–80</td>
<td>s/a to recip. (heir)</td>
<td>attitude to wealth: problem</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The sixth satire is more straightforward than 5 but, like it, it shows peculiarities of method not noted before. It begins, as Satire 2 does, with an address to a friend, in this case Caesius Bassus (1–11). But after the first five and one-half lines Bassus disappears, much as Macrinus did in 2 and Cornutus in 5, and Persius concentrates our attention on himself. These eleven lines show a neat balance, with Bassus the subject in the first half and Persius in the second half.

In the next section (12–24) Persius is on his way to becoming the s/a as he informs us that he is satisfied with his lot in life. Here the s/a is an example once again of the proper outlook, as he is in Satires 2, 4, 5, and also 1.

Once again, in these lines the satirist has inserted what appears to be a buffer passage between the address to the friend and the s/a-recipient device that fills the rest of the poem. We have noticed such buffers in Satires 2 and 5 in essentially the same position.

Persius’ hope that he may use his wealth properly (22–24) leads to the point of the satire, which he expresses in the next two lines to begin the second section: "Live right up to your own crop and grind out your granaries" (25 f.). This is the beginning of the familiar one-on-one relationship that goes through to the end of the satire. It is fairly straightforward, except that the recipient is first the person who, like the s/a, has the money and so is a potential legator (25-40), and then he is the legatee or heir who is looking forward to inheriting the money (41-80).

The discussion in each case is fairly straightforward, but we should notice the loose dialogue that appears from time to time, especially when the heir is being addressed (esp. 51-74). The questions the heir asks and the observations he makes are typical of his selfish, self-centered outlook, and we soon realize that he is really a straw man created by the s/a for his own purposes.

The overall organization of this satire is a little different from that of the other four which we have examined. The address to the legator includes a specific example (27-33), which thus prefaces the discussion of the problem as it did in the other poems. But the solution, which is in the imperative and so resembles that at the end of 4, precedes the discussion here rather than following it (25 f.). It is repeated a little later, once again in the imperative, in the context of the example (31 f.: . . . de caespite vivo | frange aliquid, largire inopi, . . .).

Satire One

This poem does not really need a prefacing outline, since its structure is for our purposes fairly simple. It begins with an emotional but completely impersonal statement that is programmatic for Persius' satires (1), and the rest of the poem consists of the s/a speaking to an unnamed recipient. This device is signalled in the second line with a question from the s/a (min tu istud ais?), which at the same time warns us to look for dialogue between these two. But this question and the line as a whole indicate something else. The recipient speaks first in reaction to the programmatic statement (2: quis leget haec?), thus indicating that he has taken the initiative. This does not happen elsewhere in the satires, but ultimately it does not make a great deal of difference, since the s/a remains in control here as everywhere else. It is a dramatic element, however, that sets this satire off from the others, and at the same time contributes to its liveliness.

The one-on-one device which runs through the satire is firmly established in the first seven lines, not only by the question of the s/a that has already been mentioned, but also by the advice which caps this passage. Here, one cannot miss the three second person exhortations (6: accedas; 7: castiges, quaesiveris) and the second person pronoun (7: te). The point has already been made that this last sentence is to be taken as a programmatic statement of Persius’ interest in the individual, and it also seems likely that here, at the beginning of his programmatic satire, Persius is drawing our attention to the diatribe method of s/a-recipient that he will employ consistently throughout the satires.

In these first seven lines, too, a dialogue seems to be carefully developed reinforcing the one-to-one relationship. But as the poem progresses, this dialogue becomes very loose and hazy, as words are attributed to the recipient rather than coming directly from him (40, 55, 112). Moreover, it is not clear whether some statements are to be taken as belonging to the recipient or the s/a (63–68, 76–78, 92–97, 99–102). This is as Persius wants it, and he tells us so. For when the s/a points to the fact that he has made up his adversary (44), he is in essence saying that he has made up his part of the dialogue, too. The recipient, then, is a straw man serving much the same function as the heir in Satire 6.

No matter how vague it becomes, the dialogue element does help to establish the association of s/a and recipient and carry the illusion through those parts of the poem where the relationship itself becomes hazy. If we choose only those passages in which the recipient is clearly addressed or is undoubtedly speaking, we discover an alternating pattern: lines 1–7, 15–30, 40–57, 79–91, 107–114, 120–125. This is quite different from anything else we have seen. In this version of the s/a-recipient device the recipient keeps fading and returning. When he fades the first time (8–14), the s/a uses a collective “we” to generalize about Rome (9: nostrum; 10: facimus; 11: sapimus; 13: scribimus), but he keeps the recipient in sight with ignoscite (11), and by having him “recite” the kind of thing the s/a has been talking about in these lines (15–17: haec . . . leges). As the recipient fades again a few lines later (30–40), the s/a keeps him in the dramatic picture by prefacing ecce to the third person examples (30), as we have seen him do elsewhere. In the next passage where the recipient seems not to be present (58–78), the s/a begins by addressing a new plural recipient (61–68) and then suddenly draws attention to the presence of the singular recipient with ecce strategically located at the approximate center of the scene (69). There is no such sign-post in the next passage (92–106), but the recipient’s comment immediately following it (107–110) shows that he has been present and has heard it.17 The next passage where the recipient is at least blurred (114–120) is actually a direct answer to the query put forward by the adversary a few lines earlier (107 f.) and so presupposes his presence. The recipient does not appear in the final lines of the satire (126–134), but the dramatic momentum and the fact that the s/a has returned to the issue that he and the recipient were discussing at the beginning of this poem allow us to presuppose the latter's presence.

Indiana University
The full significance of Nero’s visit to Greece in A.D. 66/67 will probably never be known because a complete account of the episode has not survived among the ancient literary sources.1 Quite clearly, however, Nero’s behaviour as aesthete and sportsman did nothing to halt the deterioration of relations between emperor and senate that went back to the early sixties, not to mention the political removal of Cn. Domitius Corbulo and the Sulpicii Scribonii.2 But one subject on which there is a relatively plentiful supply of information is the composition of the imperial retinue which accompanied Nero on the tour. The purpose of this paper is to draw that information together and to offer the suggestion that the location of Nero’s court and the political importance of its members contributed to and aggravated the decline of Nero’s stock with the senate in Rome.

Most of the material on the identities of the individuals who accompanied Nero to Greece comes from the epitomated account of the tour of Dio Cassius, whose jaundiced view of the whole expedition is made very clear from the start (63.8.3). It is not always certain from this that everyone mentioned was a member of the imperial entourage, but most cases can probably be assumed so. Thus, the first names to appear are those of Terpnus, Diodorus and Pammenes (Dio 63.8.4), musicians who were defeated by Nero in Greece; there follow the imperial freedman Phoebus

2 An absolutely fixed date for a breach between Nero and the senate is not likely, but for the various possibilities see M. T. Griffin, Seneca: A Philosopher in Politics (Oxford, 1976), 423 ff. On the political side of Nero’s aestheticism see C. E. Manning, “Acting and Nero’s Conception of the Principate,” G&R 22 (1975), 164 ff.; for the deaths, Dio 63.17.2–6.
(63.10.1⁸), who is shown influencing access to the emperor; Calvia Crispinilla (63.12.3–4), who is described as wardrobe mistress and chaperone of the eunuch, and Nero's homosexual partner, Sporus; Sporus himself; Pythagoras (63.13.2), another homosexual partner of Nero; the imperial herald Cluvius Rufus (63.14.3); the praetorian prefect Ofonius Tigellinus (63.12.3–4); and from a later portion of Dio's history (66.11.2) the future emperor Vespasian is named as a member of the retinue. Vespasian's presence is also attested by Josephus (BJ 3.1.3) and by Suetonius, who describes him as being inter comites Neronis (Vesp. 4.4; cf. 5.4). Phoebus' name might also be confirmed if the story of Tac. Ann. 16.5.5 belongs to Greece, which it might (cf. Suet. Vesp. 4.4; Dio 66.11.2). Philostratus (VA 5.7) gives the name of Terpus and that of another apparent musician, Amoebeus (though the source is not especially reliable), while the presence with Nero of his wife Statilia Messalina is made clear from inscriptional sources.³

This list of personnel is not likely to have composed the full retinue, for Suetonius' text at Vesp. 4.4 (above) implies the presence of others like Vespasian, Cluvius Rufus and Tigellinus among the comites, men, that is, of senatorial or equestrian status; but other names are not available. As it is, freedmen seem to predominate in the list and this may not be altogether fortuitous;⁴ indeed, other freedmen are likely to have been with Nero, for one would expect the presence of the a libellis, Epaphroditus, and the ab epistulis, whose name however is not known at this point in time.⁵ In any case, the identifiable members of the entourage were supplemented by Nero's crowd of cheerleaders, the Augustiani (said to number five thousand), members of the praetorian guard and, perhaps, the German imperial bodyguard.⁶ The full entourage was thus enormous, and in the tradition as worthy of contempt as the emperor himself.⁷ But a closer look at some of the individuals whose names have been listed reveals a greater collective importance than at first appears from the hostile tradition.

In spite of Dio's description of her duties Calvia Crispinilla cannot have been a woman of no consequence: she was well born and in the later crisis of 68 was sufficiently trusted by Nero to be sent on a mission of some political importance, an attempt to deal with the rebellious Clodius Macer in Africa.⁸ Dio's story of her rapacity in Greece (63.12.3), even if

³ See further below. Amoebeus may be the person mentioned at Ath. 14.623 d.
⁴ For the predominance of freedmen late in Nero's reign see Griffin, op. cit., 168.
⁶ Dio 63.8.3; Suet. Nero 20.3; 19.2; Millar, op. cit., 62 f.
⁷ Dio 63.8.3–4.
⁸ PIR² C 363; AJP 93 (1972), 451 ff.
exaggerated, is surely an indication that the emperor was well disposed towards her and suggests that she had influence with him. His wife, Statilia Messalina, must also have had influence. Her presence on the tour has sometimes been doubted, but she was probably included in the sacrifices of the Arval Brethren made for Nero’s return and departure in 66, while the people of Acraephia honoured both Nero and Augusta Messalina after the liberation of Greece in 67. This can only mean that she was with Nero, as indeed one would expect under immediate circumstances: Nero had married Messalina in 66, shortly before the Hellenic tour began, but a liaison between them extended back in time; a proposed alliance with Claudius’ daughter Antonia, the probable basis of which had been concern for the succession, had not proved viable, and this made Statilia’s presence in Greece compelling, because it was impossible that all thought of a successor be neglected by Nero. His homosexual relationships should not of course be thought to preclude this.

By 66, when the tour of Greece began, Vespasian had a considerable record of achievement behind him despite insignificant prospects at the outset of his senatorial career: before the consulship of 51 he had established a military reputation in Germany and Britain; and although the enmity of Agrippina had delayed further progress during the early years of Nero’s reign, the proconsulate of Africa which was held in the early sixties marks his return to imperial favour. Later propaganda made Vespasian’s attendance on Nero in Greece appear ridiculous; but there must have been more to Vespasian’s selection as comes, as the propaganda itself and his subsequent treatment of Neronian favourites show (below). One should remember that the Hellenic tour was originally intended as part of a more extensive expedition in the eastern Mediterranean and that plans of conquest were in the air. Under these circumstances it is hard to believe that Vespasian was a purely random choice for the retinue; and of course he was very conveniently available when the Jewish problem required an extraordinary appointment. It is thus beyond doubt that Vespasian was closely connected to Nero in 66/67.

The same is probably true for Cluvius Rufus, also a consular by 66. The position of imperial herald was not usually held by a senator, but

9 A. Momigliano, CAH X (1934), 735 n. 1; cf. Garzetti, op. cit., 181.
13 PIR² F 398; Griffin, op. cit., 241 f.; 452 f.
14 Tac. Ann. 16.5; Suet. Vesp. 4.4; Dio 66.11.2.
15 Cf. Garzetti, op. cit., 181 f. 16 See further below. 17 PIR² C 1206.
rather than reflecting adversely on him this should be put down to Rufus' credit. He had a reputation for eloquence,\textsuperscript{18} which could easily lead to influence with the emperor; and his proximity to Nero is signified by the claim in a later age that he had not used his influence to cause anyone harm.\textsuperscript{19} One wonders though about his blamelessness; Dio hints\textsuperscript{20} at Nero's susceptibility to informers while in Greece, and there was surely more to the removal of Corbulo and the Scribonii than imperial whim. Rufus may have figured here, as may Tigellinus, whose political status with and military importance to Nero hardly calls for emphasis; it is enough to note Dio's comment (\textit{63.12.3}) that he was constantly in the emperor's presence all through the tour of Greece.\textsuperscript{21}

There is not a great deal of information on the freedmen present with Nero, but there are nevertheless some intimations of the power their closeness to the emperor could produce. L. Domitius Paris was apparently put to death in Greece, but the motive of jealousy ascribed to Nero for this by Dio and Suetonius is suspicious.\textsuperscript{22} Tacitus makes it clear that Paris owed his position with Nero to his talents as an actor, and the relationship was of longstanding.\textsuperscript{23} Early in the reign Paris had been involved in an accusation against Agrippina contrived by Junia Silana;\textsuperscript{24} the freedman had been convincing in his role as denunciator, and this combination of artistic interests and palace intrigue was not to be taken lightly. Pammenes is known from Dio simply as an aged citharoedus not liked by Nero, though this should not exclude him from the retinue. It is tempting, in fact, to identify him with the astrologer known from Tacitus,\textsuperscript{25} and if correct this makes Pammenes also a figure tied to court politics; for in 66 the exiled Antistius Sosianus drew on the astrologer's knowledge in order to bring charges against those responsible for his own relegation.\textsuperscript{26} In the troubled atmosphere of the mid-sixties it is not impossible that Nero wished to have close to him a man who could produce imperial horoscopes, at least as a precautionary measure; Pammenes' association with Sosianus would make much better sense of Nero's distaste for him than aesthetic rivalry alone. Diodorus was another citharoedus defeated by Nero in Greece, but he did not lose favour as a result; he accompanied the emperor upon the entry to Italy and Rome in 68 and, remarkably, was later given financial rewards by Vespasian when emperor.\textsuperscript{27}

\textsuperscript{18} Tac. \textit{Hist.} 4.43.  \textsuperscript{19} Ibid.  \textsuperscript{20} Dio \textit{63.17.3–4.}
\textsuperscript{21} Tac. \textit{Ann.} 13.20.1; 22.3.
\textsuperscript{22} Dio \textit{63.18.1;} Suet. \textit{Nero} 54.
\textsuperscript{23} Tac. \textit{Ann.} 13.19–22.
\textsuperscript{24} Tac. \textit{Ann.} 16.14.1; cf. \textit{PIR} \textit{I} P 56; 55.
\textsuperscript{25} Tac. \textit{Ann.} 16.14.1; cf. \textit{PIR} \textit{I} P 56; 55.
\textsuperscript{26} Tac. \textit{Ann.} 16.14.1.
\textsuperscript{27} Dio \textit{63.20.3;} Suet. \textit{Vesp.} 19.1.
the third defeated citharoedus, Terpnus, also a longtime favourite of Nero. Phoebus was also well treated by Vespasian, though in a different way; he had been powerful enough under Nero to reproach the future emperor for indiscretion, though Vespasian did not take any later action against him for this.

Nero’s entourage was a diverse body. But the common features which united people of different social status and function were the important ones of having immediate access to the emperor and the capacity to exert influence upon him. Routine and serious business still had to be conducted in Greece by Nero, and although the sources do not show a lot of interest in this, there are signs that decisions were being made. When the governorships of Upper and Lower Germany were left vacant by the deaths of the Scribonii, they were filled by the new appointments of C. Verginius Rufus and Fonteius Capito. The latter was probably one of the consules ordinarii of 67, but he had left office by 20 June of that year, presumably to take up the German command. Likewise, C. Cestius Gallus is not on record in his province of Syria after the autumn of 67, and he was probably replaced late in the same year by C. Licinius Mucianus. The appointment of Vespasian to the Jewish war, moreover, was made early in 67. Military appointments such as these had to continue to be made, but what is significant is that only the emperor could make them. In the province itself, when news of an uncomfortable situation in Rome reached Nero from Helius, Suetonius’ quotation of an imperial rescript in reply indicates that the emperor was receiving correspondence as normal; and at least one embassy, of Jews, appeared before him in Greece. Further, the project to cut a canal through the isthmus at Corinth had a serious side to it and is suggestive of previous careful consideration. And it is similarly instructive that when Nero died in 68, it was known that arrangements for the holding of the consulship had been made by him for some time ahead; this procedure, and the planning involved, must have been applied retrospectively too.

31 PIR² F 468; cf. A 1580 (L. Aureliius Priscus).
33 E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, revised and edited by G. Vermes and F. Millar (Edinburgh, 1973), 491.
35 Jos. BJ 2.556.
36 Suet. Nero 19.2; B. Gerster, BCH 8 (1884), 225 ff.
37 Tac. Hist. 1.77.
If business such as this simply could not be neglected, the only advisers available to Nero on whom he could draw for opinions (whether or not they were followed) were the people present in the retinue, who, in effect, came to form the government of the Empire. The entourage, however, was an exclusive body, composed of individuals who have a collective history of involvement in court politics, and it had the capacity to block all access to the emperor. Now the mobility of the court throughout imperial history has been shown to be something characteristic of the way in which government functioned; but this broad view tends to underestimate the element of time for immediate political contexts. What is unusual in this case is that, from a narrower viewpoint, Nero's tour of Greece was the first occasion on which the emperor and his court had been out of Italy since Claudius' expedition to Britain, more than twenty years before. From the senate's vantage point in Rome, the situation must have recalled the earlier experience with Tiberius on that emperor's withdrawal to Capri; for there was no way of telling how long Nero would be away from Rome and Italy: when he did return, it was clearly a sudden move on his part.

Nothing in actuality could demonstrate the powerlessness of the senate as a bloc more than the display of power by the emperor from the provinces and the display of influence, real or imagined, by those with him, particularly freedmen. On this basis it seems plausible that Nero's eventual loss of support among the upper sections of Roman society while he was in Greece was due, not to the actions of Helius and Polycitus in the capital alone, nor just to the execution of prominent members of the senate and his own "unimperial" behaviour, but also to the resentment against the emperor and his retinue felt by those who found themselves in no position to make recommendations or overtly influence what decisions were being made while Nero was in Greece. It is worth the final observation that no emperor after Nero again left Italy before Domitian went on campaign, almost twenty years later.

Stanford University

Amicitia and the Unity of Juvenal’s First Book

RICHARD A. LAFLEUR

The theme of treacherous friendship recurs throughout all sixteen of Juvenal’s Satires. Amicitia and the adjective amicus are in every instance used by the satirist ironically; and only in a very few of as many as thirty-nine occurrences does the noun amicus bear an interpretation of honest camaraderie. Among the “friends” of Books Two through Five there are niggardly patrons, avaricious, self-serving clients, sexual degenerates and eunuchs, thieves, and others we might call at best fair-weather friends. The alliance depicted is nearly always in fact an unfriendly bond between men somehow unequal. Most often Juvenal has in mind the miserably eroded state of the patronage system; he employs the term amicus for both cliens and patronus, but he always underscores the paradox of applying this traditional label to the frequently impersonal and sometimes overtly antagonistic patron-client relationship. Through all the later books Juvenal’s picture of friendship in general, and of patronage in particular, is consistently dismal.

The unhappy idea is first introduced, however, and most thoroughly developed in the five satires of Book One, where friend/friendship words are more numerous than in the other four books combined. 1 “It’s difficult

1 For a briefer, more general treatment of the friendship theme in Juvenal’s five books, see my “Amicus and Amicitia in Juvenal,” CB 51 (1975), 54–58; a useful discussion of amicitia as it applies to the patron-client relationship appears in Peter Green’s introduction to his Penguin translation, Juvenal: The Sixteen Satires (Baltimore, 1967), 30–32, and passim.

2 Amicus (noun) appears twenty times in Book One, at 1.33 and 146; 2.134; 3.1, 57, 87, 101, 107, 112, 116, 121, and 279; 4.88; 5.32, 108, 113, 134, 140 (regarded by some editors as an interpolation), 146, and 173; amicitia occurs at 4.75 and 5.14; amico (noun) at 1.62, 3.12, and 4.20; and amicos (adjective) should be read for acutos in 5.41, as I have argued in “Juvenal’s ‘Friendly Fingernails’,” WS 88 (1975), 230–235. In Books Two through Five the words are far less frequent; amicus (noun) appears eighteen times, in a fairly even distribution.
not to write satire,” Juvenal insists in his program poem, and to prove his point he parades before us a scurrilous band of knaves and villains certain to rouse any audience’s indignation. Following the betrothed eunuch, the bare-breasted, pig-sticking huntress, Crispinus and the other millionaire parvenus, there menacingly appears the magni delator amici (1.33–36):

... magni delator amici
et cito rapturus de nobilitate comesa quod superest, quem Massa timet, quem munere palpat 35
Carus et a trepido Thymele summissa Latino.

Although the delator cannot be certainly identified, it is clear that the magnus amicus against whom he informed was no very dear comrade. Here, as often, magnus is equivalent to potens: the “great friend” is some powerful associate, doubtless the informer’s patronus, like the other magni amici of Book One. This reference to dangerous friendships, and the introduction of Crispinus, Massa, Carus, and several other Domitianic figures in this section of the poem (verses 22–50) are intentionally programmatic, designed by Juvenal to foreshadow themes, characters, and situations that will be more attentively explored later on, particularly in Satire Four.

The audience is permitted a second glimpse at Roman amicability in this opening poem, when the satirist describes the frustrations of a group of clients at their patron’s less than generous treatment (132–146):

vestibulis abeunt veteres lassique clientes votaque deponunt, quamquam longissima cenate spes homini; caulis miseris atque ignis emendus.
optima silvarum interea pelagique vorabit 135

3 There is little to recommend the recent suggestion that Juvenal refers to Publicius Certus’ role in the prosecution of Helvidius Priscus, made by Léon Herrmann, “Cluviaenus,” Latomus 25 (1966), 258–264. The context seems to demand a Domitianic figure who could have been involved with the other characters in 35 f. Several commentators have favored M. Aquilius Regulus (PIR² A1005): see, e.g., J. E. B. Mayor (ed.), London, 1886), ad loc. See below, n. 11.

4 As can be seen from a glance at the commentaries, the several identifiable figures in 22–50 are associated with the reign of Domitian. Juvenal’s purpose here is, not only to justify his interest in satire, as he says he will do in 19–21, but also to give a specimen of his objects and his techniques. He will name names, but only of those who are dead (like Massa and Carus) or otherwise politically impotent (like the exile Marius: 49): thus the satirist demonstrates by example what he will explicitly announce later, in 150–171, where he discusses the dangers of onomastikoniodein. He will in this book attack characters drawn primarily from the Domitianic period: thus he anticipates Satires Two and in particular Four, which are most critical of the ultimus Flavius and his regime. On the naming techniques employed in 1.22–80 and their programmatic function, see John G. Griffith, “Juvenal, Statius and the Flavian Establishment,” G&R, 2nd ser., 16 (1969), 147 f., and my “Juvenal 1.80: Cluvianus?,” RPh 50 (1976), 79–84.
rex horum vacuisque toris tantum ipse iacebit. nam de tot pulchris et latis orbibus et tam antiquis una comedunt patrimoniam mensa. nullus iam parasitus erit. sed quis ferat istas luxuriae sordes? quanta est gula quae sibi totos ponit apros, animal propter convivia natum! poena tamen praeens, cum tu deponis amicus turgidus et crudum pavonem in balnea portas. hinc subitae mortes atque intestata senectus. it nova nec tristis per cunctas fabula cenas; ducitur iratis plaudendum funus amicus.

The gluttonous patron is called ipse and rex, like Virro, the stingy patronus of Satires Five and Nine, and like his lordship Domitian in Four. The personified gula of verse 140 anticipates gula saevit and plorante gula in 5.94 and 158, while comedunt patrimoniam (138) recalls the nobilitas comes metaphor of line 34 in the earlier amicus passage. The patron's hungry friends are, again like Virro's, his aging, tired dependents. After years of grudging abuse, the clientes are now dealt one final disappointment—the old man has died intestate! It is with this scene that the satirist aptly completes his re-creation of a typical day in the city (the topic of 127–146). The afternoon closes with a funeral, an event to be applauded by the deceased's angry retainers. Here, too, concludes the satirist's diatribe on the corrupting effects of avarice, a major theme of 87–146 (Juvenal's epilogue on the perils of onomasti komodein follows with the transition at 147–150). Amicus is the satirist's last word; and it is delayed, like amici in verse 33 and amicus throughout Book One, to final position in the line, where the para prosdokian is specially accentuated. As William Anderson has remarked, the "epigrammatic statement [of 146] punctuates this section decisively."

It can hardly be construed as accidental that this dramatic closing scene of the program poem neatly prefigures the closing poem of the book, with its description of Virro's demeaning dinner for his client-friends and its sardonic portrayal of amicitia (Satire Five, like the cena passage in One, ends abruptly with a form of the word amicus). But, like the earlier allusion

---

5 If the comedere echo is intentional, Juvenal looks forward to the association of gluttony and other vices which he establishes later in Satire Four. For ipse and rex in Four and Five, see below. Gula does not occur again until the Fourth Book, though compare the related gluttisse in 4.28 (of Domitian).

6 Throughout the sixteen satires amicus occupies final position (the single exception is in 6.510). The deliberate positioning seems to reflect, not merely considerations of metrical convenience, but also Juvenal's wish to emphasize the word's nearly always ironic sense.

to a "great friendship" (line 33), the patron's feast in 1.132–146 also foreshadows Satire Four, where both Crispinus and Domitian are, as we shall see, a nearly perfect match for this cormorant who, excluding his amici, "devours the choicest foods of the sea" (135) and gorges alone on a huge creature "born for a banquet" (141).

In Satire Two we meet a single amicus; he, as might be expected in this poem, is a pervert (134 f.):

\[
\text{quae causa officii? "quid quaeris? nubit amicus}
\text{nec multos adhibet."} \quad 135
\]

"Why so busy?" says one. "You ask?" quips the other, "It's a special friend—he's going to be a bride—and only a few are invited!" In this one exchange may be seen the essence of the satire: business has become buggery, man has become woman, friendship has become farce.

Up to this point Juvenal's amici fall a trifle short of the Ciceronian ideal. But the next friend in the book is none other than Satire Three's Umbricius, fugitive from the slings and arrows of a corrupt and thankless Rome. Most students of Umbricius take him to be a purposely sympathetic figure, an actual friend of the poet or perhaps a Juvenalian alter-ego.\(^8\) The satirist himself, however, is admittedly confusus (3.1–3):

\[
\text{quamvis digressu veteris confusus amici}
\text{laudo tamen, vacuis quod sedem figere Cumis}
\text{destinet atque unum civem donare Sibyllae.}
\]

A curious, enigmatic preface. Confusus, usually rendered "upset" or "saddened," can suggest intellectual rather than emotional confusion, and hence might be translated "puzzled." Indeed, though Umbricius' sentiments are frequently close to those which Juvenal expresses elsewhere, there is much in his program that seems paradoxical and un-Juvenalian, not least of all the proposed exile to the not so idyllic umbra of Cumae. No longer quies (as Statius had called her: Silvae 4.3.65) since completion, more than a decade earlier, of the via Domitiana, which passed directly through her forum, and oldest of the Greek cities in Italy, Cumae was a doubly peculiar retreat for the xenophobic pastoralist Umbricius, who should have preferred the rustic simplicity of Gabii or some sleepier Latin

---

\(^8\) Barry Baldwin's recent discussion of Umbricius, if it can be said to take a position, is traditionalist ("There is nothing un-Juvenalian about Umbricius' diatribe. . ."). "Three Characters in Juvenal," CW 66 (1972), 101. My own view of the character's intended function, suggested below, is more fully defended in "Umbricius and Juvenal Three," ZAnt 26 (1976), 383–431.
town. Juvenal himself would hardly have considered permanent withdrawal from the city that provided the farrago for his satire; indeed he seems almost certainly to have remained in Rome throughout his literary career.

We should take a clue to Juvenal’s real intention for the Umbricius character from the meaning of amicus and amicitia elsewhere in the Satires, especially in Book One. In the Third Satire itself amicus appears eight more times. The first friend after Umbricius is another magnus amicus, a rich patron whose guilt makes him the timorous victim of an amicable blackmailer (a magnus semper timearis amico: 57); the obvious irony recalls the “great friend” of 1.33. In the space of thirty-five lines (87–121: part of the invective in Graeculos) the word occurs six times, always for uncaring patrons like the one who has rejected Umbricius. The Greek parasites who have succeeded in wooing these patroni are, Umbricius protests, flatterers, debauchees, faithless villains. At worst, repeating the crime of Egnatius against his patron Barea Soranus, they will even murder their “friends”: occidit . . . delator amicum (116, at line’s end) is unquestionably meant to echo magni delator amici in the program poem (1.33, also at line’s end).

9 Umbricius complains, “Non possum ferre, Quirites, | Graecam urbeum” (60 f.), and late speaks nostalghically of Praeneste, Volsinii, Gabii, Tibur (190–192), Sora, Fabrateria, Frusino (223 f.), and Juvenal’s own Aquinum (319), all (except Volsinii) in Latium. If Umbricius is to be narrowly identified with Juvenal, why does he not retire to Aquinum or one of those other towns nearby? Why Cumae of all places, a city so Greek in its associations? Not, certainly, to escape crime and vice: as the ianua Baiaeum (4), Cumae was gateway to the Roman Sodom, and, by Umbricius’ own admission, the neighborhood was infested with brigands (305–308). Nor for solitude, since the new coastal highway had brought visitors, money, and a flurry of new construction: see J. Rufus Fears, “Cumae in the Roman Imperial Age,” Vergilius 21 (1975), 1–21.

10 Even if the uncertain tradition of Juvenal’s exile to Egypt is accepted, Umbricius’ flight from Rome is no parallel. The Egyptian exile was by all accounts involuntary, and would likely have antedated Juvenal’s literary career in any case, as Gilbert Highet contends in Juvenal the Satirist (Oxford, 1954), 26 f. The poems furnish no evidence of any violent disruption in his lifestyle; in the later satires Juvenal seldom retreats farther than into the comfort of his own urban apartment.

11 The scholiast on 1.33 sees the delator amici reference as an allusion to the same incident touched upon here in 3.116. Egnatius Celer’s appearance as a witness against his friend and patron Marcius Barea Soranus in a.d. 66 (Tac. Ann. 16.32). Against this identification is the fact that the context of 1.33–35 is Domitianic (above, n. 3), while Celer’s activities date to Nero’s reign (he was exiled in 69). Still, the undoubtedly intentional echo links the two poems thematically through the similar depiction of comparable events. Soranus (who is mentioned again favorably in 7.91) and his daughter were condemned to death for their anti-Neronian sympathies along with Thrasea Paetus (for Thrasea in Juvenal 5.36, see below and n. 39).
Amicus, even at its final appearance later in the poem (278–280), becomes ironic through the satirist’s incongruous analogy:

```
ebris ac petulans, qui nolium forte cecidit, dat poenas, noctem patitur lugentis amicum
Pelidae, cubat in faciem, mox deinde supinus. 280
```

The drunken bully has no friend, Juvenal implies; nor is such epic friendship as that of Achilles for Patroclus to be found in the seething cosmopolis.

Umbricius’ place in all of this is that of the exclusus amicus at his patron’s threshold, resenting the orientals who have displaced him, not so much for their alleged treachery toward the patron-friend as because they refuse to share him. Umbricius’ last complaint is the most revealing (121–125):

```
... numquam partitur amicum, solus habet. nam cum facile stillavit in aurem exiguum de naturae patriaeque veneno, limine summmoveor, perierunt tempora longi servitii; nusquam minor est iactura clientis. 125
```

When Juvenal labels this frustrated client vetus amicus in line 1, he may only mean to recall the veteres lassique clientes of the program satire: like them Umbricius is old (3.26–28), tired (25: he likens himself to Daedalus, who put off his fatigatas . . . alas at Cumae), and disappointed at his patron’s door (3.124, 1.132 f.). Umbricius is also close to the mistreated amicus of Five, Virro’s client Trebius (5.64: veteri . . . clienti), and especially to Naevolus, the parasite discarded by Virro in Juvenal’s only other dialogue, Satire Nine.¹² A more patently unsympathetic figure, Naevolus, aging, tattered and torn, like Umbricius, and rejected by his patron, even considers abandoning Rome and settling at Cumae.¹³ The correspondences are too striking not to have been intended.

Both characters function very like Catius and Horace’s other interlocutors in Sermones Two: each represents the doctor inaeptus type, to use Anderson’s expression, the “teacher who fails to grasp the implications of his own precepts and thus ends as a figure of fun.” 14 Catius, “Mr. Shrewd,” lectures Horace and his audience on delicatessen in Sermones 2.4. 15 The piece concludes with some good-natured humor at the expense of the Epicureans and with Horace’s swearing, sarcastically of course, by Catius’ friendship (88 f.):

¹² H. A. Mason has noticed the kinship of Three and Nine, pp. 100 f. of his study, “Is Juvenal a Classic?,” in J. P. Sullivan, ed., Satire: Critical Essays on Roman Literature (Bloomington, 1968), 93–176; like most readers, however, Mason takes Umbricius too seriously and fails to notice the numerous similarities between him and Naevolus. In an article not available to me when I wrote “Umbricius and Juvenal Three” (above, n. 8), Franco Bellandi has drawn attention to many of the characteristics shared by Umbricius, Trebius, and Naevolus: see “Naevolus cliens,” Maia 26 (1974), 279–299.

¹³ Cf. 3.24 f. with 9.21 (their proposita); 3.22 with 9.27 f. (their labors unrewarded); 3.26–28 with 9.9, 129 (their age); 3.125 with 9.59 f., 71 f. (the two as rejected clients); 3.148–151 with 9.28–31 (tattered clothing as evidence of their paupertas); 3.2, 24 f. with 9.56–60 (their interest in Cumae).

docte Cati, per amicitiam divosque rogatus, ducere me auditum, perges quocumque, memento.

Introduced by the satirist near the beginning of the poem, given the pulpit and allowed to dominate the satiric dialogue, 16 friend Catius proceeds to expose himself and his praeccepta vitae beatae to ridicule, not so much on account of his basic principles (his culinary advice is essentially sound, as Anderson remarks) as for the absurd, un-Roman extremes to which he would carry them, and the grandiose tone in which he offers his expert advice. Umbricius may be just such a “friendly advisor,” meant more to provoke than to persuade. Certainly Juvenal meant to draw attention to the problems of life in Rome, a topic that was commonplace, but he also expected his audience to question Umbricius’ motives and his irrational, unproductive solution to those problems. 17

---

15 Catius I take to be a significant name, a device common in satire. For other etymologically appropriate names in Horace, see Niall Rudd’s “The Names in Horace’s Satires,” CQ, n.s., 10 (1960), 168–170. Umbricius may also have been chosen for its etymology. Anna Lydia Motto and John R. Clark suggest an intended connection with umbra, in the sense of “ghost,” and view Umbricius as a kind of Spirit of Rome Past. withdrawing from the corrupt reality of the present to the supernatural world of Cumae and Avernus: “Per iter tembrisum: The Mythos of Juvenal 3,” TAPA 96 (1965), 267–276; cf. Baldwin, 101, and pp. 147 f. of S. C. Fredericks’ chapter, “Juvenal: A Return to Inventive,” in E. S. Ramage, D. L. Sigsbee, and Fredericks, Roman Satirists and Their Satire (Park Ridge, New Jersey, 1974). Perhaps more likely is the possibility that Umbricius was meant to suggest the adjectives umbraticus and the sometimes pejorative umbratilis, “fond of the shade,” (umbra in the sense of leisure and retirement: cf. Juvenal 7.8 and 173), in which case the name would be quite appropriate to the character’s propositum of abandoning Rome for the idyllic seclusion of Cumae. For other pastoral elements in Satire Three, see Charles Witke, pp. 128–151 of his Latin Satire: The Structure of Persuasion (Leiden, 1970), esp. 133 f. Similarly Naevolus’ name, “Master Wart” (perhaps borrowed from Martial 3.71 and 95), suits his ugly disposition.

16 Catius is given about 86 percent of the lines in Horace’s satire, while Umbricius has 94 percent; Damasippus, in Serm. 2.3, controls 96 percent of the conversation.

17 Thus the satire cuts in two directions, like many of Juvenal’s later poems; cf. David S. Wiesen on Satire Seven, p. 482 of his “Juvenal and the Intellectuals,” Hermes 101 (1973), 464–483: “This counterpoint of two opposite and conflicting themes, one of which
The Third Satire is in scope the most comprehensive poem of Book One, and the longest. With its 322 lines, in fact, the piece is nearly identical in length to Satires One and Two combined (341 lines), and to Four and Five combined (327 lines). Probably later in composition than both Two and Four (which are more concerned with Domitian), Satire Three is given the position that befits both its own importance and the structural balance of the book as a whole. Viewed in this way, the two poems that follow constitute an equivalent third part of the volume. And indeed there is reason to believe that Juvenal intended his readers to perceive Satires Four and Five as a cohesive unit, an inseparable, because complementary, pair. It is the prominence of the amicitia theme that, beside establishing a link with the preceding satires and responding to the program poem in particular, provides the remarkable parallelism between Four and Five themselves.

On the surface the two satires appear unalike: one burlesques an imperial concilium, while the other describes an ungenerous patron’s dinner party for his miserable clientes. Four begins with a prologue that reintroduces the Domitanic rogue Crispinus (1–27). Juvenal touches first on the man’s foppishness (hinted at in the program, 1.26–29) and his gross sexual vices, and then concentrates on a more trivial aspect of his general degradation, his gluttony. There is a single illustration: Crispinus, once a fishmonger himself in his native Egypt, had recently purchased an enormous mullet for 6,000 sesterces. “The fisherman himself could have been questions the validity of the other, is an essential but little noticed characteristic of Juvenalian satire.” Similarly, in the mock consolation of Thirteen, Juvenal “satirizes the genre itself [consolatio] and Calvinus [his addressee]”: so Mark Morford, “Juvenal’s Thirteenth Satire,” AJP 94 (1973), 26–36. Only a few scholars have detected the anti-Umbrician aspect of Juvenal Three, and none have sufficiently discussed the matter: see Mason, 126, 135; Anderson, “Lascivio vs. ira: Martial and Juvenal,” CSCA 3 (1970), 29; and S. C. Fredericks, “Daedalus in Juvenal’s Third Satire,” CB 49 (1972), 11–13, esp. 13: “Umbricius’ personal solution to the evils he sees around him is merely to escape and to leave the city behind him no better for his departure. Like the disgruntled members of our own society who flee the Inner City for a more pleasant life in the suburban fringes, Umbricius has merely contributed to the problem, not to the solution.” Fredericks takes a more traditional stand in his chapter for Roman Satirists, but even there comments on the similarity of Umbricius to the unsympathetic Trebius.

19 For Crispinus, who is otherwise known only from Martial 7.99 and 8.48, see Peter White, “Ecce Iterum Crispinus,” AJP 95 (1974), 377–382.
bought for less,” the satirist complains. But far worse than the extravagant price was the fact that Crispinus had acquired the fish, not as a gift for some childless old man aimed at securing a place in his will, nor for some “powerful woman-friend” in order to win her favor, but solely for his own palate (18–22):

consilium laudo artificis, si munere tanto praeclamam in tabulis ceram senis abstulit orbi;
est ratio ulterior, magnae si misit amicae, 20
quae vehit horum latis specularibus antro.
nil tale expectes: emit sibi.

Crispinus’ gluttony recalls the cena of 1.132–146, while munere and magnae . . . amicae echo magni . . . amici and munere in 1.33–35. The hypothetical great lady is the third “powerful friend” of the Satires: the first is betrayed (1.33), the second is intimidated (3.57), the last is the prospective victim of ratio ulterior.

In a transitional passage of nine lines (28–36) Juvenal shifts our attention toward Domitian. When a scoundrel like Crispinus can rise to such luxury in the imperial palace, belching up thousands at a single course, what should we expect of his model, the emperor himself? Vice loves vice—this is Juvenal’s point here and throughout the satire. A man of influence, whether an emperor, a bureaucrat, or a wealthy patron, will surround himself with associates who are his moral equals from the start or who will rise or (more easily) descend to his level.

The major division of the poem (37–149) is a seriocomic burlesque, mock epic in tone, of an emergency meeting of Domitian’s council. A fisherman from Picenum has taken a huge turbot in his nets. Fearful that Domitian’s agents would confiscate the fish, claiming it as imperial property, the piscator determined to profit in grace at least, by delivering his catch personally to the emperor. While Domitian’s amici look on from the doorway, fish and fisher are admitted to the royal chambers (exclusi spectant admissa obsonia patres: 64), and the gift is ceremoniously presented: “Rejoice, accept and consume this fish, too great for a private oven. Preserved by the gods until your generation, it insisted on being caught . . . for thee!” No one loved flattery more than Domitian, and so he accepted all the fisherman offered. But then an unnerving discovery was made—the palace cupboard lacked a platter large enough to hold the emperor’s new fish. Straightaway the amici principis were summoned into special session.

Verses 72–149 caricature the councillors, eleven men closely associated with the Flavian regime, most of them known to us from other sources. Although the satire contains little in the way of direct criticism of Domitian himself, we are nonetheless, as Highet observes (page 82), "conscious of his power, and of his brooding incalculable dangerous character, silent and unpredictable like a snake." The emperor is seen most clearly as a reflection of those men who come under his influence. Earlier in the poem intimations of Domitian's character were to be gleaned from the behavior of Crispinus and the fisherman; but the most damning insight is provided in the depiction of the advisors as they hasten into the meeting-room (72-75):

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{vocantur} & \\
\text{ergo in consilium proceres, quos oderat ille,} & \\
\text{in quorum facie miserae magnaeque sedebat} & \\ \text{pallor amicitiae.} & \\ \end{align*}
\]

Once more we are reminded of the "great friendships" of One and Three; and we may even recall the magna amica of 4.20, and thus see the theme of perverted amicitia as yet another link between the prologue and the narrative of this poem, whose structure has been so frequently criticized. In the lines that follow, the behavior of the councillors ranges from timorous reticence to gross adulation. The group, in which Crispinus makes his final appearance, includes adulterers, informers, murderers, and others, like Crispus and Acilius, whose worst crime was submissiveness. The relationship with Domitian shared by all of them, Juvenal suggests, was quite literally appalling. It parallels almost exactly the dread friendships of the earlier satires: here the emperor is the ultimate patron, while the 21 Green has remarked (pp. 46 f.) that Four "is a broken-backed affair which has defied even the most ingenious attempts to unify its parts"; and Michael Coffey concludes that the poem "remains obstinately in two parts," in his "Juvenal Report for the Years 1941-1961," Lustrum 8 (1963), 206; cf. E. J. Kenney, "The First Satire of Juvenal," PCPhS 8 (1962), 30 f. The work of Stegmann, Helmbold and O'Neil, and Anderson should have saved the poem from this criticism. The first cogent defense of the satire's unity was offered by W. Stegmann, who pointed to the essentially chiastic structure (Crispinus' sceler, 1-10; his facta leviara, 11-27; Domitian's nuga, 37-150; his sceler, 150-154): De Juvenalis dispositione (Weyda, 1913), 30-34, esp. 33. W. C. Helmbold and E. N. O'Neill build upon Stegmann's work in "The Structure of Juvenal IV," AJP 77 (1956), 68-73; William Anderson has contributed other important insights, "Studies," 68-80; cf. Heilmann, 359-365; Ross S. Kilpatrick, "Juvenal's 'Patchwork' Satires: 4 and 7," YCS 23 (1973), 230-235.

frightened and frightening advisors are his gloomy clientes.22 Their terror is wholly justified, for, as the satirist remarks (86–88):

\[ \ldots \text{quid violentius aure tyranni,} \\
\text{cum quo de pluviis aut aestibus aut nimboso} \\
\text{vere locuturi fatum pendebat amici?} \]

Friendship, Juvenal repeats, can be fatal.

In the end the counsel of mountainous Montanus prevails (his culinary expertise was apparent from the fact that his belly had arrived at the meeting before him: 107). The fish would not be carved into plate-size portions, but rather, with suitably epic flair, a mammoth platter would be fashioned for it, and royal potters would be appointed to meet similar crises in the future. The amici principis are abruptly dismissed, like the client-friends of 1.132; and Domitian, as Helmbold and O’Neil rightly suppose (page 72), prepares to glut himself alone on the monstrous scaly beast.

If the fish is a symbol “of the Empire and what Domitian has done to it,” as Professor Anderson has argued,23 then the emperor is more ghoul than glutton. Although Anderson does not make the point, this is precisely the image Juvenal wished to convey in his epilogue (150–154):

\[ \text{atque utinam his potius nugis tota illa dedisset 150} \\
\text{tempora saevitiae, claras quibus abstulit urbi} \\
\text{inlustresque animas inpune et vindice nullo.} \\
\text{sed perit postquam Cerdonibus esse timendus} \\
\text{cooperat: hoc nocuit Lamiarum caede madenti.} \]

Cerdonibus in 153, rightly construed by Mayor and Knoche as a cognomen (rather than a common noun), is used as a generic plural.24 Through his

22 Green’s observation is apropos (p. 30): Juvenal “saw the feudal relationship everywhere: between master and slave, between patron and client, between the jobber of army commissions and the hopeful military carecrist. Roman society formed a vast pyramid, with the Emperor—the most powerful patron of all—at the top, and the rabble roaring for bread and circuses at the bottom; in between came an interlinked series of lesser pyramids, where one man might play both roles, patronizing his inferiors and toadying to those above him.”

23 Anderson, “Studies,” 78: “The physical enormity of the rhombus . . . ideally symbolizes the sensual and moral enormity of the court, for both suffer the violence of Domitian, and the court is a microcosm of the Empire.”

24 The word is capitalized by both Mayor (see his note, ad loc.) and Ulrich Knoche (ed., Munich, 1950); both likewise capitalize in 8.181 f., quae | turpis Cerdoni Volesos Brutumque decebunt, with which cf. 4.13 f., nam, quod turpe bonis Titio Seiioque, decebat | Grispinum. In both Four and Eight Cerdo is a type-name (like Titius and Seiius) for the lower classes, in contrast to the Lamiae, the Volesi, and the Bruti, despite those who posit in reading cerdo as a common noun (including Hight, 82; the OLD; W. V. Clausen, ed., selection of this Greek name ("Mr. Craft"), common in Italy only among slaves and freedmen, Juvenal is reminding us that Domitian was assassinated, partly at the instigation of his wife Domitia Longina, by a gang of palace menials and libertini who felt themselves threatened by the emperor (hence timendus). 25 Ceronibus is neatly balanced by the plural cognomen Lamiarum, which occurs in the same metrical position in the following line. The allusion in 154 illustrates by example the general statement of 151 f., for the Aelii Lamiae, a family praised by Horace and Tacitus, were among the innocent victims of Domitian's scourge. As commentators have generally noted, Juvenal's audience would think in particular of L. Aelius Lamia Plautius Aelianus, consul suffect in A.D. 80: Domitian first stole his wife Domitia (who would subsequently participate in the plot against the emperor's life) and then had him murdered about twelve years later. 26
But Lamiarum, like so many of Juvenal's personal names, contains a double meaning. Besides alluding specifically to Aelius Lamia and to the failure of the senatorial class in general, however severely abused, to remove Domitian from power, the name conveys a final intimation of the emperor's bestiality. The last two words of the poem, caede madenti, the careful juxtaposition Lamiarum caede madenti, would conjure up for the ancient audience a vision of the Lamiae of myth and Marchen, the carnivorous, bloodsucking death-demons who victimized poor innocents asleep in their Oxford, 1959). The name is related to Greek ἱππός, and thus connotes profiteering and cunning; for its use as a cognomen, esp. for slaves, see RE Suppl. 1 and 3, s.v., the Onomastica in TLL and Forcellini, and the indexes to F. Preisigke, Namenbuch (Heidelberg, 1922) and D. Foraboschi, Onomasticon Alterum (Milan, 1971). Cf. Martial's sutor (PIR2 C662), 3.16.1; 3.59.1; 3.99.1; the merchant in Apul. Met. 2.13 f. (PIR2 C663); Petr. 60.8:

aietb autem unum Cerdonem, alterum Felicianem, tertium Lucieronem vocari.

25 Suet. Dom. 17 numbers among the actual assassins Stephanus Domitillae procurator, Clodianus cornicularius, Maximus Partheni libertus, Satur decuria cubiculariorum, and an unnamed man e gladiatorio ludo; Juvenal's timendus may be explained either by the fact that Stephanus had recently been charged with embezzlement (a crime possibly hinted at in 70 and n. 33), or by Dio's testimony (67.15) that the conspirators included chiefly men whom Domitian held suspect and had designated for execution, a fact of which they were 26 The cognomen Lamia is common only to the gens Aelia; for the family, see Hor.

Corm. 1.26.8; 1.36.7, and esp. 3.17; and Tac. Ann. 6.27 (where the Aelii Lamiae are described as a genus decorum). For Domitian's abuse of Lamia Aelianus (PIR2 A205), see Suet. Dom. 1 and 10, where the man's death is connected with the executions of Thrasea Paetus and Aelius Glabrio (the councillor of Juvenal 4.95), and with the exile of Hel-vidius Priscus (on Paetus and Priscus, see below, n. 39).
beds. If Domitian does not actually devour his prodigious turbot before our eyes, Juvenal nonetheless leaves us with the ghastly spectre of Rome’s most literally monstrous emperor Lamiarum caede madenti, “dripping wet with vampires’ gore,” fresh from feasting upon the state’s nobility—once more an image foreshadowed in the program poem by the nobilitas comesa of 1.34.

This grisly fusion of gluttony and murder, besides recalling the cannibalism metaphor of Satire One, glances back at the opening lines of Four itself. In fact, the entire epilogue serves a dual purpose. First, it enhances the satire’s unity: the closing vision of Domitian’s monstrous bloodfeast brings to mind the prologue’s depiction of Crispinus, his gluttonous consumption of an enormous fish (as in Domitian’s case, implied, not described), and his characterization as an irredeemably vicious monster (monstrum: a word conspicuously repeated throughout the poem). As readers have seen with increasing clarity, Crispinus and Domitian reflect one another; their actions here, which, it is emphasized, comprise every kind and degree of vice, are mirrored in the poem’s opening and conclusion. And the behavior of both men, it is equally important to realize, is intentionally prefigured by the poet in the two amicus passages of Satire One. Secondly, while focusing most sharply on the emperor, the epilogue affords the satirist one last gibe at those men who are equally his target, the amici principis like Crispinus and Acilius, and others of the nobilitas comesa, like the Lamiae, who were either too terrified or too corrupt themselves to exorcise Rome of her demonic possessor: men “on whose faces had settled the pallor of a great and miserable friendship.”

27 Though I was independently attracted to this interpretation, the double sense of Lamiarum has already been noticed by R. J. Rowland, Jr., in “Juvenal’s Lamiae: Note on Sat. 4.154,” CB 40 (1964), 75; Rowland’s suggestion appears to have been ignored in all subsequent studies of the poem. The double entendre develops from the possibility of reading Lamiarum as both objective and subjective genitive.

28 See above, on nobilitas comesa and comedunt patrimonia, 1.34 and 138. In the prologue to Four gluttony is emphasized as just one aspect of a more general degradation. Murder and gluttony coalesce in cannibalism, subject of the metaphor at 1.34 and the vampire image it foreshadows in 4.154. Juvenal’s interest in a more literal cannibalism surfaces in Satire Fifteen.

29 Monstrum is applied to Crispinus (2), to the turbot (45), and (in 115) to Catullus, not, as Anderson supposes (“Studies,” 78), to Veiento (the relative clause and all of 114–122 describe Catullus). This Catullus, the grande monstrum (the quoque of 115 is meant to recall Juvenal’s similar labelling of Crispinus and the fish) and caecus adulter (116), is to be identified with L. Valerius Catullus Messalinus (PIR I V41), consul with Domitian in 73. For his actual blindness see Pliny Ep. 4.22.5 f.; but basis (118) and qui numquam visae flagrabit amore puellae (114) are designed to evoke the caecus amor, Messalinus’ relative and namesake, the republican poet Catullus: see my “Catullus and Catulla in Juvenal,” RPh 48 (1974), 71–74.

The principal theme of Juvenal Five is likewise magna amicitia. As Peter Green has commented in comparing this poem to the Fourth Satire, “it is the same story, but the props have been changed.”\(^{31}\) Again the relationship is an unfriendly one, between the sadistic Virro and his grovelling client Trebius; again, whatever “greatness” may exist in the partnership derives merely from the patron’s wealth and status. The noun amicus appears seven times in this satire, more frequently than in any other, and always in the emphatic final position; significantly, amico is the last word of the poem (and of the book).\(^{32}\) In each case the term is equivalent to either cliens or patronus: the union between patron and client has become, Juvenal once more suggests, venal, contemptuous, even hostile.

Like Satire Four, the poem opens with a brief prologue and a transitional section (1–11, 12–23), in which theme and context are established, the client-friend introduced, and the posture of the satirist indicated. Trebius is here a fitting counterpart to Crispinus in the prologue to Four. Both amicci are of undistinguished origin; both have become shameless dependents; the two differ more in degree than in quality.\(^{33}\) Crispinus is ridiculed as Domitian’s court dandy (deliciae: 4.4), while Trebius (5:3 f.) is scornfully compared to Augustus’ palace jesters, Gabba and Sarmentus (whom Plutarch similarly labels δηλίκια).\(^{34}\) The kinship between Five and the preceding poem is most clearly revealed, however, by the echo of magna amicitia from 4.74 f. which we hear in the cynical pronouncement of verse 14: fructus amicitiae magnae cibus.\(^{35}\) “The only profit from this great \(^{31}\) Page 32; Green further compares Four, Five, and Nine as treatments of “Juvenal’s favourite theme, the corruption of personal relationships,” (48) and comments on the double-edged attack in each of these three poems (32 f.). What he does not point out is that the double-edge slices at all the “friends” of Satires One, Two, and Three as well.\(^{32}\) Line references are given above, n. 2.

\(^{33}\) Juvenal alludes to Crispinus’ base origin; see also White (n. 19, above). Neither Trebius nor his wife Mygale (or Mycale) bears a distinguished name; they and their host are likely fictitious, though for some attempts at identification see my “Umbricius,” 384 f. n. 5.

\(^{34}\) Sarmentus (PIR II 144) is almost certainly the scurra named in Hor. Serm. 1.5.51–70; once the property of Maecenas, Plutarch says of him, δέ Σάρμεντος ἄρν τῶν Καλάσαρος παγρίων παιδάριον, ἤ δηλίκια Ἦρωμαίου καλόνα (Ant. 59: 32 B.C.). Quintilian mentions both Sarmentus and Gabba (PIR II G1) as wits (6.3.58; 62). The two Augustan buffoons are a proper match for Trebius, who provides the comedia (157) for his unpleasant host.

\(^{35}\) The phrase, in the genitive case at both 4.74 f. and 5.14, appears nowhere else in the Satires (though cf. 6.558 f.); we are meant, of course, to recall the magni amici of One and Three. We may here cite a valuable study of the structural and thematic interrelations of Horace’s Satires (which so profoundly influenced Juvenal), C. A. van Rooy’s “Arrangement and Structure of Satires in Horace, Sermons, Book 1, with More Special Reference to Satires 1–4,” AClass 11 (1968), 38–72. Commenting on Horace’s pairing of intentionally complementary poems, van Rooy affirms the principle that, beyond the friendship is . . . food”: the sort of parasite typified by Trebius will do anything for a free meal, and so, quite appropriately, this is all he will get. But even dinner invitations are rare, continues the satirist-advisor, and they are always carefully recorded by the grudging patron in his account of services rendered (15–23).

The following 146 lines (24–169) illustrate in detail the inferior drink, food, and service that Trebius will endure at Virro’s board while his lordship, looking on with a cruel haughtiness, dines in the grandest style. Even this division of the poem bears striking resemblances to the narrative in Satire Four. In both the context is culinary. In both the imperious patron and his submissive amici are gathered about a table (somewhat like the friends of the program poem who cheered the funeral of their niggardly patronus).36

Whereas the concilium in Four dealt with the matter of how to serve the emperor’s marvelous fish, the longest section of Five (80–106, at the poem’s center) describes the seafood actually served at Virro’s cena. Trebius gets an eel that looks like a snake, or a pike fat from the sewers, and a single prawn. The biggest fish, as in Satire Four, goes to the host: Virro dines on a richly garnished lobster, a huge lamprey (muraena . . . maxima: 99), and, most significantly, an expensive mullet, just like Crispinus’ in the prologue to the earlier poem. Compare in particular 5.92; 97 f.,

\[
mullus erit domini . . .
\]

\[
\begin{align*} instruit ergo focum provincia, sumitur illinc \\ quod captator emat Laenas, Aurelia vendat^{37} \end{align*}
\]

mere repetition of a theme, “repeated use of a particular word, or name, or of a special phrase, will be found to be even more significant in proving that the author, usually in a most subtle manner, deliberately wrote or edited two satires to form a pair” (p. 41).

36 In One, the patron actually dines alone (136; 138: mensa), but we later find his irati amici at table (145); cf. 5.4, 145. In Four, the “host” and his councillors are seated (76: sedit; 144: surgitur), and the topic of conversation recalls the traditional symposium; foremost among the “guests” is the plump gourmand Montanus (130–143). The word cena recurs through all three poems: 1.133, 145; 4.30; 5.9, 24, 85, 117. Heilmann (367) rightly compares longissima cænae | spes (1.133 f.) with volorum summa (5.18) and spes bene cænandi (5.166): the client-friends of the program and Trebius are alike in having as their highest aspiration the hope for a meal. Witke’s reaction to the irati amici in this regard is just what Juvenal must have intended: “Here Juvenal by a brief touch puts these wretches into proportion: they have sunk so low that their most far-reaching expectation is free dinner. He states it aphoristically, with no overt condemnation” (p. 122).

37 Laenas is unknown (though see Hight, 293); Aurelia is meant for a woman of position, perhaps to be identified with the victim of Regulus’ captatio known from Plin. Ep. 2.20.10 f. Heilmann (968) also compares the two mullet passages.
Thus Juvenal deliberately employs in both passages the example of a costly fish, a mullet in either instance, whose value is ironically computed in terms of its worth to a captator as a present for some influential woman. Trebius' "great friend," like Domitian and Crispinus and the nameless patron in One, will devour the extravagant treat without sharing it. Moreover, just as the patron of Satire One is served—besides seafood (135)—an entire boar, so is Virro (5.116); Trebius, on the other hand, eats cabbage (5.87), and so do the irati amici of the program poem (1.134).

When he first mentions Virro's mullet, Juvenal calls it the "master's" fish (mullus ... domini: 92). The epithet dominus had been a favorite of Domitian's, of course, and the satirist applies it to him twice in Satire Four, once in a comment about his fish (pisces | ... elapsum veterem ad dominum debere reverti: 50-52), and again in describing the emperor's savage abuse of his amici (mors tam saeva ... | et domini gladiis tam festinata: 95 f.). Virro likewise is master to both fish and friends: Juvenal titles him dominus again at 71, 81, 137, and 147. And, like the gluttonous Domitian of 4.28 f. (qualis tunc epulas ipsum glutisse putamus | induperatorem) and the selfish patron of 1.136 (vacuis ... toris tantum ipse iacebit), Virro is five times referred to with the lordly ipse (30, 37, 56, 86, 114). When Virro is dubbed rex (14, 130, 137, 161), we are once more reminded both of the greedy patron-king of the program (optima silvarum interea pelagique vorabit | rex horum: 1.135 f.) and of Domitian, whom Juvenal had compared with Tarquinius Superbus (4.103) and sardonically labeled induperator (29), Caesar (51, 135), Atrides (65), and dux magnus (145). The intent of these several correspondences should be obvious: Virro (like Crispinus) is a reflection of der Führer. Both patroni are cruel, voracious tyrants who take sadistic pleasure in sneering at and intimidating their "friends." And all three men, Virro, Domitian, and Crispinus, are prefigured by the vile potentate of Satire One, whose malicious perversion of friendship was specifically designed to foreshadow the magna amicitia of Four and Five.

What could otherwise have been a wholly apolitical satire, is intentionally politicized—and thus brought nearer to Four—through the parallelism of theme and setting, and this association of Virro with Domitian. Political comment is interjected in other ways. At the outset Trebius is compared with abused palace clowns, a slur at the imperial wit (3 f.). When Juvenal describes the wine served Virro (which he refuses to share with a friend: 32), it is said to be of the vintage that Thrasea and Helvidius used to quaff when toasting the birthdays of the republican heroes, Cassius and the Bruti (32–37): 38 Thrasea Paetus, a friend of Juvenal’s predecessor Persius, had been executed by Nero for his republican sympathies; his son-in-law Helvidius Priscus, exiled by Nero, had been executed by Vespasian; and Domitian himself had ordered the deaths of Junius Rusticus, biographer of the two men, and Helvidius’ son, the younger Priscus (a satirist of sorts, possibly alluded to in Satire One). 39 Virro’s luxuriousness is likened to the opulence of Rome’s kings (56–59); and when Juvenal contrasts his stinginess toward his clients with the generosity of kinder patrons, he again selects the names of men condemned for their antimonarchical activities, Piso and Seneca (108–111). 40 In a last taunt at Roman royalty, the mushrooms offered Trebius and his fellow clients are compared to those served Claudius by Agrippina (146–148):

vilibus ancipites fungi ponentur amicis, boletus domino, sed quales Claudius edit ante illum uxoris, post quem nihil amplius edit.

A political undercurrent flows throughout the satire, linking the degeneracy of Rome’s social institutions, the patronage system in particular, with the degeneracy of her emperors.

The epilogues of Four and Five are also similar. While in the concluding line of each poem there is a final thrust at the odious lord (Lamiarum caede madenti, 4.154; tali . . . amico, 5.173), his compliant friends are rebuked as well. In Four, as we have seen, Juvenal condemns Domitian’s councillors and the aristocracy in general for submitting to his reign of terror. Here

38 Audiences might think not only of the conspirators M. and D. Junius Brutus, but also of L. Brutus, Tarquin’s nemesis, to whom Juvenal had earlier alluded in a gibe at Domitian (4.102 f.).

39 For Thrasea, see PIR2 C1187; for the Helvidii, PIR2 H59–60; our principal sources are Tac. Ann. 16.21–35 and Suet. Dom. 10. The Helvidii were from the Samnite town of Cluviae, and it has been suggested that the younger Priscus is the Cluvienus (or Cluvianus) of Satire One: see L. A. MacKay, “Notes on Juvenal,” CPh 53 (1958), 236–240, and my “Juvenal 1.80.” Cossutianus Capito had compared Thrasea to Cassius and the Bruti in an accusatory speech to Nero; Juvenal may have this speech, or Tacitus’ account of it (Ann. 16.22), in mind here.

40 The two Neronian suicides appear together again as men of unexampled generosity in Mart. 12.36.8. With them Juvenal also names a Cotta, probably the same as the patron of 7.95, and perhaps to be identified with M. Aurelius Cotta Maximus, son of Messala Corvinus and younger friend of Ovid (Pont. 1.5 and 9, 2.3 and 8).
in Five the satirist reproaches Trebius for shamelessly enduring Virro’s tyranny (170–173):

ille sapit, qui te sic utitur. omnia ferre si potes, et debes. pulsandum vertice raso praebebis quandoque caput nec dura timebis flagra pati, his epulis et tali dignus amico.

Just as Rome herself was envisioned in the earlier poem as a slave to the “bald Nero” (calvo serviret Roma Neroni: 4.38), so here Trebius plays the willing servus to Virro’s dominus. The amici in both poems, because of their servility, are no less guilty than their masters. The two epilogues even perform a comparable structural function. In the same way that Domitian’s bloody feast, at the end of Four, evokes the more literal gluttony of the monstrum Crispinus at the beginning, Juvenal’s cold stricture against Trebius, in the closing lines of Five, is carefully designed to recall his opening criticism: in both prologue and epilogue Trebius is pictured as a slave, and the emphatic condition omnia ferre | si potes in 170 f. (with pati, 173) is a shrill echo of si potes illa pati, in verse 3.41

Thus in their form, characterizations, and setting Satires Four and Five are markedly alike; in both magna amicitia is the dominant theme. Virro, with Trebius and the other amici gathered at his dinner table, are intended to mirror Domitian, with Crispinus and his fellow amici gathered about the conference table. The correspondences constitute far more than artistic nicety. Juvenal unquestionably meant to suggest that corruption had insinuated itself into every stratum of Roman society. In modelling Virro after Domitian he may further have wished to imply that a leader sets the moral tone, not only for his own close associates, but for the citizenry at large, ultimately influencing, for better or for worse, men of every station.

There can be little doubt that Juvenal published his sixteen satires, not individually, but in five separate volumes.42 Moreover, as modern scholarship has become increasingly aware, the poet was quite naturally 41 Juvenal underscores the reproof in both 3 and 171 through his use of short, choppy words, the repeated dentals and labials, and through the clash of iactus and accent in 171, with the caesura at full stop in the center of three spondees. Cf. Hight, 263 n. 4, who also observes that “quis enim tam nudus? (163) recalls lines 6–11.” Thus the arrangement of the opening eleven lines and the closing eleven lines is to an extent chiastic, another feature of the poem’s structure paralleling Four. For comparable structural parallelism in the Sermones, see van Rooy, esp. 41–56, and David Armstrong, “Horace, Satires I, 1–3: A Structural Study,” Arion 3 (1964), 86–96.

42 Note Juvenal’s own words, nostri farrago libelli (1.86); the five books as we have them from about 500 mss. are certainly arranged in chronological order (cf. Hight, 10–16, 45); early references to the Satires include book numbers (Hight, 192; J. D. Duff, ed. [Cambridge, 1925], xv).
concerned with the formal and thematic integrity of each volume as a published unit. Each of Juvenal’s books open with a program poem, written or at least revised last, which looks forward to material that will be developed in the following satires. This is especially true of Book One, a carefully organized, finely balanced whole, whose construction reveals the author’s extensive rhetorical training. The first satire is broadly, sometimes minutely programmatic, introducing not only themes, but even techniques, and some of the specific characters and situations to be employed later in the book. The remaining four poems have been edited and arranged, not chronologically, but in accordance with thematic and structural aims.

While there are important ancillary topics, such as avarice and hypocrisy, it is the predominant theme of corrupted amicitia and the general disintegration of personal relationships that contributes most to the book’s unity. “Juvenal’s programme-satire hinges round the caricature of a patron-client relationship,” as Green has remarked (page 30), and indeed most of the amici of Book One are clients and patrons. The friendship theme was first introduced early in Satire One with the appearance of the treacherous magni delator amici, and then brought up again toward the end of the same poem, in the more detailed scenario of the greedy patronus and his angry dependents. The Second Satire, concerned primarily with sexual degeneracy, touches upon another perversion of amicitia.

In Satire Three the character who so bitterly denounces Rome is himself a rejected dependent. Is Umbricius the lone true friend of Book One, Juvenal’s “old comrade”? Or, when interpreted in light of the book’s other four poems, should this vetus amicus be seen only as another aging client, prefigured by the anonymous veteres lassique clientes of the program satire, and himself anticipating Trebius, the more openly criticized vetus cliens of Five? It may not be, as Hight supposes, that the client-friends of this book, sympathetic in the earlier satires, become suddenly “disgusting” in the closing poem, but rather that Juvenal’s own position, through a favorite device of Roman satire, is only very gradually revealed. As the

43 The exception is Book Two, with its single, long Satire Six. See William S. Anderson, “The Programs of Juvenal’s Later Books,” CPh 57 (1962), 145–160, esp. 145: “the initial satire in every book, while less obviously than Satire 1, serves a programmatic purpose in its particular book.” Regarding the unity of each volume, Hight comments (45), “when Juvenal published a book of them he designed it as a group, knowing what was in it and what collective effect it would produce.”

44 Hight (85) is “sorry” for the “middle-class parasites” of Satire One and shares “their wry humiliations” in Three. But Juvenal certainly did not mean us to sympathize with the magni delator amici of 1.33 nor his counterpart in 3.116 (occidit...delator amicum), poet's "friend" in a satiric dialogue, Umbricius calls to mind methods employed in Sermones Two, and in particular the ironic friendship of Horace and Catius; and while, as an abused client, Umbricius invites comparison with Trebius, he is not coincidentally a close match for Virro's other dependent, Naevolus, the discarded homosexual companion in Juvenal's later, more Horatian dialogue, Satire Nine. Whether or not we are to feel as little sympathy for Umbricius as we do for Naevolus, Satire Three's other amicī all continue the pessimism of the preceding poems.

Set at the end of the libellus, equal in length to Satires One and Two, and following the central, more comprehensive Third Satire, Four and Five together neatly balance the collection. In juxtaposing the two poems he had made so alike structurally and thematically, Juvenal intended to draw attention to their affinity, and thus develop to completion an idea that had been introduced in the program poem and given increasingly sharper focus. Both poems respond directly, and at times in detail, to the amicitia passages of Satire One. Four takes up especially the theme of dangerous friendships and extends the nobilitas comesa metaphor. Five not only mirrors the preceding poem, but—most appropriately, since it concludes the book—it develops notions implicit in the patron-client scene at the conclusion of the program satire. Perverts and princes, the old nobility and the nouveaux riches, and even—the Fifth Satire would emphasize—the poor and the dependent, all are equally to blame for the social corruption in Rome and the dissolution of traditionally sacred bonds. Gilbert Highet calls Satire Five "the climax of the entire book." It is indeed, both in the sense that Highet proposes, and in the fact that it at once fully clarifies and confirms the book's dominant theme. Magna amicitia, in every sense and at every level of society, is extinct.

University of Georgia

both of whom are client-friends; and, once we consider the book as a whole, we need to reassess our sympathy for the dinner-grubbing irati amici, and all the other veteres clientes and amicī of One and Three.

45 Highet (85) sees the Fifth Satire as climactic in its final revelation of the character of the Roman upper class; but it is equally true that Juvenal's attitude toward the client class, increasingly direct, is here most completely revealed.
Irony of Overstatement in the Satires of Juvenal

S. C. FREDERICKS

In The Satirist, Leonard Feinberg offers a suggestive definition of satiric technique as a "playfully critical distortion of the familiar." This tactical approach to satire thus involves four interrelated parameters: by "playfulness" Feinberg means that wit and humor are essential to satiric discourse; "criticism" presupposes that the satirist rejects an established set of values in favor of another set which is not yet established, or (if he is a conservative) no longer in force, or perhaps only implicit in his thinking; "distortion" suggests that the fictions created by the satirist are bound to be unrealistic to some extent since it is the satirist's purpose to induce a new sense of the real in his readers; finally, "the familiar" informs us that satire requires norms, at least as a point of departure. It is this fourth parameter, "the familiar," which has often limited our understanding of individual satirists and satiric literature as a whole. We may regard as typical Gilbert Highet's assertion that the subject matter of satire should be topical: that is, it should be directed toward the realia of contemporary life and name specific people, places, and actual events. Though satire

2 The Anatomy of Satire (Princeton, 1962), 16 ff. For recent attempts to view Juvenal specifically as topical in this sense, see B. Baldwin, "Cover-Names and Dead Victims in Juvenal," Atheneum 45 (1967), 304–312; U. Knoche, "Juvenals Maßstäbe der Gesellcertainly can be topical and realistic in this direct way, I believe that “the familiar” against which a satirist reacts comprehends a much broader and more imaginative range of possibilities than this.

By now it should be axiomatic that Juvenal is one great satirist whose effectiveness cannot be ascribed to topicality or contemporaneity in Hightet’s sense. K. H. Waters and G. B. Townend are two important scholars who recently have insisted that the center-focus of Juvenal’s imagination is late Flavian society, and that it is this era, already part of Roman history, which provides the satirist with his major characters and events. We simply do not learn many facts, if any, about Trajanic or Hadrianic society from reading Juvenal, yet the poems seem to have been published under two later Emperors, if we may trust the reconstructions of our best scholars.

This recent trend in scholarship is valuable mainly for directing our attention to areas other than immediate topicality in order to discover the sources of Juvenal’s satiric power and vitality. Like other satirists, Juvenal is dependent on the conventions and institutions of his culture as a point of departure for his peculiar kind of communication, but this basis in “the familiar” goes far beyond those topical considerations which have too often been the sole domain of critical investigation. First, there is earlier literature: Roman satiric traditions, the epic genre in general, and Vergil, Ovid, and Martial in particular are all fundamental to Juvenal’s imagination and the verbal means of expressing that imagination. Second, there is moral philosophy, the younger Seneca’s in particular, though Juvenal really reacts to the entire system of intellectual and moral clichés that underlie contemporary moral philosophy.\textsuperscript{6} Third, there is also the old Greek mythology, which is supposedly rejected in the satirist’s apology in the First Satire, but which is fundamental to his imagination throughout the satires.\textsuperscript{7} Fourth, there is the all-encompassing field of rhetoric, which has long been a major focus of scholarly research, with basic studies by Josué De Decker and Inez Scott-Ryberg.\textsuperscript{8}

What is significant in Juvenal’s technique is that he simultaneously exploits and satirizes each of these cultural forms just mentioned. Or, rather, we would do better to refer to them not merely as cultural forms nor merely as modes of discourse, but—in terms of their functions in Juvenal’s works—as the essential forms of imagination available to contemporary society. Juvenal succeeds, not by avoiding these various sterile forms which were to become even more ossified in the second century, but by working through them to provide such outrageously exaggerated pictures that we cannot take the forms seriously any longer. We must call into question the nature and limits of intellectual forms whose potential Juvenal elaborates to the point of making their unreality obvious and explicit. However, we cannot embark on such speculations about Juvenal’s art unless we are willing to look at him from a perspective which is the opposite of the conventional one. That is, we have to recognize from the outset of our investigation that the satirist is no believer.

In the area of rhetoric, the scholarship has long been led astray by the manuscript \textit{vitae}, which assert that until middle age Juvenal practiced declamation as a personal interest, and by the one reference in the First Satire (15) that the satirist had experienced the regular school training in rhetoric. Yet there are more telling expressions of Juvenal’s real attitude toward the suffocating effect of rhetoric on contemporary culture: his ridicule of the famous Quintilian in the Sixth (75 and 280) and Seventh Satires (186–198), his deflation of the reputation of Hannibal in Satire 10 (166 f.) by remarking that the whole majestic career of the great general is reducible to a schoolboy’s declamation, and the joke in the Fifteenth \textsuperscript{7} J. C. Bramble, \textit{Persius and the Programmatic Satire} (Cambridge, 1974), 12 f.

Satire (112) that the world has become so corrupt that even the fanciful land of Thule now has its own schoolmaster of rhetoric.

We must also approach mythology with a similar awareness. Ovid had already demystified mythical narrative in the Metamorphoses, revealing that myths were the creative universe of the story-teller and his art. Juvenal definitely shows a preference for the Metamorphoses, not only for the substance of his mythological allusions throughout every satire, but also for the spirit in which he treats myth. Thus in the longer myths of Satires 1 (Deucalion and Pyrrha), 3 (which assumes the overall, “archetypal” structure of the myth of degeneration from the Golden Age), and 6 and 13 (Golden Age), Juvenal establishes a contrast between contemporary reality and the mythical, divine, and heroic past, which is doubly ironic because neither present nor past is idealized.

We know, for example, that Juvenal is not being serious about the myth of Saturnia regna in Satire 13 (38–52) when he says Juno was just “a little maid” and Jupiter was still only a “private citizen.” But the satirist goes further than this when he embarks on a remarkable series of negative exempla: “There was no banquet of heaven-dwellers up in the clouds, no boy from Ilium, nor Hercules’ lovely wife by the cups, nor Vulcan, after slurping down the nectar, scrubbing his arms black from his Liparian smithy (taberna, 45, here a comic anachronism); each god dined by himself, and there wasn’t a crowd of deities as there is today; and the stars, happy with a few divinities, crushed poor Atlas with a lesser weight; not yet had fierce Pluto and his Sicilian wife been allotted the gloomy empire of the lowest abyss, nor was there the wheel [of Ixion], nor Furies, nor the rock [of Sisyphus], nor the punishment of the black vulture [for Tityus] (42–51).” Ironically, what made the Golden Age golden was the very fact that there weren’t so many gods! Yet this passage must also be juxtaposed with an analogous catalogue, later in the same poem (75–85): men will take an oath by just about every religious relic (and many in this list are incredibly exotic), and even by the whole “arsenal of heaven,” because 11 This point has been raised often enough. See S. C. Fredericks, “Juvenal’s Fifteenth Satire,” ICS 1 (1976), 189 and note 32 (for cross-references to the work of M. Morford and D. Wiesen), and, earlier, “Calvinus in Juvenal’s Thirteenth Satire,” Arethusa 4 (1971), 219 f. and 229, notes 7 and 8.

they know they cannot be held accountable unless there are human witnesses. There is a serious message to be gained from the satirist’s comic exaggerations: men who are willing to worship anything, as Juvenal says his contemporaries do, really hold nothing sacred. But this is just one of his many studied overstatements in the satires to the effect that quantity has displaced quality in Roman society.

Juvenal manifests the same scepticism toward the other two imaginative forms mentioned earlier. Thus in Satire 2, Juvenal can ridicule Stoicism, not for its intrinsic worthlessness as a moral philosophy, but because it is just another massive deception in a society already mired in pretense and artificiality. Perhaps we expect Juvenal to treat the sacred cow of literature more gently, but that is not what he does in either the First or Seventh Satires, whose attacks against the sterility of contemporary literary art are obvious and elaborate. What could be more explicit than this sarcastic image in the Seventh Satire: “Nevertheless, we still keep at this (poetry); we keep turning our plows in the meager dust, and keep overturning the shoreline with sterile plowshares (48 f.).” The reference to a poetica tempestas in the Twelfth Satire (23 f.) is another recognition by Juvenal of the unreality of much poetic discourse, especially epic.

We therefore must now approach Juvenalian satire with a much expanded awareness of what constitutes the object of his attacks. Even when he appears to deal most directly with contemporary social givens, actually he is often providing exaggerated counter-structures to current Roman cultural “myths,” especially those related to literary conventions and traditions. In Satire 2, to counter the Roman mythology of virility and manliness and martial virtue, particularly elaborated in Silver Age epic, Juvenal gives us a contrived epic travesty about the total effeminacy of an entire culture’s males. To correspond to the overly pious and traditional view of Roman woman, paraded in Statius’ Silvae and elsewhere, Juvenal gives us an equally exaggerated portrait of female impudicitia and luxuria in Satire 6. Satire 5 (based on the conventional cena-theme) exposes the complete impossibility of the traditional patron-client relationship, a social structure hopelessly perverted by a mean, vicious patron like Virro, but also perverted by a decadent, servile client like Trebius.

Ironically, “plowing the shoreline” as a metaphor for the pursuit of a useless task is still another literary commonplace exploited by Juvenal opportunistically. For a list of occurrences, see J. D. Duff’s commentary (ed. M. Coffey, Cambridge, 1970), ad 1.157.

Satire 4 is an analogous case. Highet has argued persuasively that Juvenal is parodying a court epic by Statius, but even without relying on his special way of looking at the poem we still have the effusive praise of Domitian in Statius' Silvae and in several epigrams of Martial. The demonic portrait of the emperor sketched by the satirist is therefore an inversion—of equal degree in the opposite direction—of his image as "dominus et deus" in literature (e.g., Martial 5.8.1) while alive. The satire is therefore just as much an indirect attack against the perversion of literature and thought as it is direct satire against the deceased Princeps. In other words, what actually constitutes "the familiar" in this poem is the world of Imperial poetic propaganda, whose pretentiousness and artificiality, masking murderous viciousness, are properly deflated by Juvenal's inflated and travestied portrayal of a solemn meeting of the ministers of state on the matter of a large fish caught recently in the Adriatic.

Hence, we should now consider that Juvenal's art can be "contemporary" or "topical" in an extended sense because it so often reacts to the contemporary Roman imagination—its modes of expression, its norms and conventions, in particular those which reflect a long and obvious tradition (and might therefore seem even the more inadequate for contemporary needs). In Juvenal's first two books, satire against this intellectual framework of conventional and traditional ideas is mostly indirect. In these six poems Juvenal presents his arguments against contemporary life through vivid and indignant attacks couched in his own voice—this mode of presentation commonly being referred to as a "persona" in satire scholarship—or in barely disguised versions of that indignant voice, like Laronia in Satire 2, or Umbricius in 3. However, what is exposed in addition in these poems is the futility of reactionary Romanism, insofar as the desire for the "old ways"—for all of its emotional satisfaction—is irrational and impossible in a contemporary context. Perhaps this much indicates only that the traditional Roman system of values has become senile; yet there is further evidence that, beneath his apparent nostalgia for a lost age of idealism, there is a deeper self-awareness on the part of the satirist that his fiery vehemence is acutely decadent. I refer specifically to the highly stylized, polished, and self-conscious rhetorical cast of the first six poems. This is certainly no mark against Juvenal’s wit or creativity, but it does suggest another dimension by which the laudator temporis acti exposes his own artifice. We share with the satirist the realization that what we have before us achieves its ultimately serious purposes only through the indirect route of artful play.

15 Juvenal (above, note 2), 256, note 1.
16 In addition to the very full listing of passages in Highet, Juvenal (above, note 2), 256–262, see the discussion in K. Scott, The Imperial Cult Under the Flavians (Stuttgart, 1936), 88–125.

The prologue to the Third Satire provides one of the most obvious and effective examples of the kind of wit generated by playful, self-effacing overstatement. Here the satirist emphasizes his horror of Rome in a crescendo of terrors, from fires to “constant” (adsiduos, 8) collapses of buildings, to the “thousand perils of the savage city (8 f.),” only to cap his series with a deflationary anti-climax, “and poets reciting in the month August.” We know that this item has been included in the wrong kind of list, that Juvenal is not being serious at this specific point (though we cannot generalize from this that he is not being serious elsewhere in the poem, nor that his wit cannot have a serious function), that fear of sitting through a hot, stuffy recitation should not be included in a list with real terrifying catastrophes. The inclusivity is momentarily appealing through sheer perverseness, through its following out of the logic of overstatement already begun in the list of real terrors (as in the emotionally charged words horrere and saevae), but it finally ends up by pointing to its own unreality. Though catalogues and lists are often evidence of a satirist at work, and are one of the typical satiric techniques for the distortions mentioned by Feinberg, they are particularly well suited to Juvenal’s technique of creating vivid overstatements to violate our sense of the familiar.

Such sophisticated “showpieces” as this indicate that Juvenal is no simple conservative moralist, as if he naively and nostalgically fantasizes that his society could ever return to the glory, freedom, and creativity supposedly the possession of the great days of the Roman Republic. Like Petronius before him and like his great contemporary, Tacitus, Juvenal sees that contemporary reality involves a two-fold hypocrisy. On the one side, the facts of recent Roman history were unmistakable: this world was indeed dominated by the highly artificial pursuit of money and the power represented by it. Direct satire against this parvenu culture (e.g., wealthy Greeks and freedmen in Satire 3) is an obvious feature of Juvenalian satire. On the other, possibly under the continued influence of the Augustan renovatio—which constituted a peculiar Roman cultural myth dominant in the early Principate—there was a second and conservative intellectual layer by means of which contemporary Romans could believe they were still part of the great traditions of the Republic and its ancient institutions. It is Juvenal’s indirect satire against this anachronistic moral code that W. S. Anderson and other exponents of the persona-theory have brought to our fuller awareness in recent years. Indeed, among the "familiar" givens of Juvenal’s world we must also include mos maiorum and the laudator temporis acti, whose futility is implicitly explored in Books 1 and 2. Overall, therefore, Juvenal is a satirist of the "double irony" in these first six poems: he would have us reject both contemporary decadence and archaic pseudo-morality.

18 See Anderson, “Anger” (above, note 6), 127 and 131–135.

Since Gilbert Highet’s study, scholarship has generally recognized that Book 3 begins a new phase for the satirist, since he no longer emphasizes an angry persona whose overstated beliefs and excessive indignation are a means of critical self-exposure (as, e.g., paradoxically, the enraged Umbriicius of Satire 3 seeks to escape Greek-ridden Rome by migrating to Greek Cumae). Instead, many of these later poems involve various forms of imaginative (especially literary) decadence and sterility as the primary object of satiric attack. I believe, however, that Juvenal’s most explicit and self-conscious statement that his poetry deals with the failure of the human imagination comes in his Tenth Satire, the classic on "The Vanity of Human Wishes," which we have too long read with an emphasis on vanity and without enough attention to wishes.

The first detailed elaboration of men’s misconceptions about what is good for them is the Sejanus-episode (56–81). There is no question that the Emperor Tiberius’ infamous praetorian prefect serves Juvenal’s portrayal of the first vicious desire explored in the poem, which is ambition for political power at any cost. This theme is announced at once by the word potentia (56). But what is more remarkable is that Juvenal does not describe Sejanus himself until line 67. It is the public image of Sejanus that he ridicules: first in an outrageous description of the destruction of the erstwhile master politician’s statue of himself done up in a triumphal chariot (58–60), which ends with Juvenal ludicrously expressing sympathy only for the "innocent horses," whose legs are shattered by the hammer.

19 In addition to Ronald Syme’s classic The Roman Revolution (Oxford, 1939), the most valuable background study is H. W. Litchfield, “National Exempla Virtutis in Roman Literature,” HSCP 25 (1914), 1–77.

20 For the expression, "double irony," a common satiric technique by means of which "two equally invalid points of view cancel each other out," see Booth (above, note 1), 62 Wymer (above, note 1), 239 f., refers to this phenomenon as "the problem of secondary irony," and distinguishes these direct and indirect levels of satire as "thesis" and "anti-thesis" layers, respectively. R. C. Elliott, The Power of Satire (Princeton, ’960), provides an analogous approach with his idea of "the satirist satirized."
The pretentiousness of Sejanus’ “public relations” image is justifiably deflated by the colloquial word for horses, caballis, “nags.” Then we get a picture of metal statues being melted down in the forge, and what were once grand and fine displays of one’s own power have now been turned into “water jars, basins, a skillet, and piss pots (64).” But at last we do see Sejanus—being led by the hook to the Gemonian steps. Now is when he will be seen (spectandus, 67), in the real flesh of a corpse, not in the artificial “public relations” forms of marble and bronze; Juvenal lets us know those are gone before the corpus delicti is.

The incredible swiftness of Sejanus’ fall is reinforced by one of Juvenal’s more memorable epigrams, which tells how it happened: verbo sa et grandis epistula venit | a Capreis (71 f.). From the inflated expression “wordy and pretentious” we descend to the realization that it was only a letter which brought seemingly so great a man so low, so quickly. This is what justifies Juvenal turning in subsequent lines to the fickleness of the mob, disposed to believe in the power of the goddess Fortuna: for if events had by chance gone the other way, they would have been ready to accept Sejanus, just as slavishly, as their emperor. Hence, Juvenal’s sarcastic expression, turba Remi (73), “Remus’ crowd,” is certainly justified to emphasize the cowardly (anxius, 80) loser-mentality of the Roman populus—quick to cringe or condemn, depending on shifting political winds in the imperial court, yet slavishly worshipping these same power-figures (in their ultimate daydreams for like powers), before settling for the dole of their “bread and circuses.”

Later in the same poem Juvenal turns to famous generals and conquerors in world history, and certainly there is explicit, direct satire against the reputations of men like Xerxes, Alexander, and Hannibal (133–187). There are, however, two suggestions in this passage that Juvenal is doing something more than this. His Hannibal is described like some overpowering natural force: “... he leaps across the Pyrenees; nature sets the snowy Alps in his path, but he tears the cliffs apart and shatters the mountains with vinegar (153).” Although Juvenal borrows this detail about Hannibal’s use of vinegar to break up blocked mountain passages from Livy’s description (21.37.2), he exaggerates it by the use of overly graphic verbs, diducit and rumpit. After the chiastic word order of diducit scopulos et montem rumpit the final word in the hexameter, aceto, which goes with both preceding clauses, must come both as a surprise and as a deflation of the epic grandeur of the previous words.

Juvenal makes the feats of conquerors even more incredible—and more explicitly so—in a later reference, to Xerxes: “men believe that once upon a time ships sailed through Mount Athos [velificatus, 174, an instance of overly pompous diction] and whatever else that lying nation of Greece is bold enough to tell in history, that the sea was paved with those same Persian ships and set as a solid track beneath chariot wheels; we believe that deep rivers went dry and streams were drunk away by the foraging Mede, and all the rest of what Sostratus sings with drenched wings (173–178)." The satirist continues for some time in this same vein, even naming the sea "Ennosigaeus," "Earthshaker," a far-fetched application of Poseidon's Homeric epithet as a metonymy for the sea, and finally, Xerxes, too, is deflated by the ignominious realities of his defeat by the Greeks. However, what is perhaps just as important in this exemplum is that Juvenal's exaggeration of Herodotus (to be sure, mediated through the otherwise unattested epic poetaster, Sostratus) corresponds to his earlier exaggeration of Livy's words on Hannibal. The satirist's emphasis on the verbs creditur (173) and credimus (176) is intended to develop a larger dimension to his satire, to deliberately render the general's successes incredible and unrealistic, and consequently to deflate the power-fantasies and wish-fulfillments of his contemporaries. Juvenal thus ridicules people who believe in the Hannibals and Xerxes of this world.

Another illustration of this same function of exaggeration is one of the most brilliantly sustained exercises in irreverence in ancient literature. I refer to the repulsive description of old age in this same Tenth Satire (188–239). Juvenal starts with physical deformity, and after a blunt insistence on its sheer bodily ugliness, the opening lines are capped by a hilariously overlong and pretentious simile of two verses, which describes wrinkles on the elderly as like those which "a mother ape scratches on her ancient cheek where Numidian Thabraca extends shade-bearing glades (194 f.)." Then we turn to a list of specific physical infirmities (198–200, 203 f.), capped here by a vivid, obscene description of sexual impotence (204–207). From here the argument takes an abrupt turn to describe all the pleasures the elderly are incapable of feeling—starting from the sexual (208–212), then portraying the hopeless limits imposed on the hard of hearing (213–216). Next Juvenal leaps to still another semantic order—claiming that the elderly are plagued by such a race of illnesses that he could sooner count the adulterous lovers of the infamous Oppia, the number of victims accounted for in just one season by the doctor Themison, the number of business partners cheated by one man, wards cheated by still another, the number of sexual victims exhausted by a famous prostitute, and finally—with an obscene capping—the number of pupils seduced by a teacher (219–224). And we are surely on safe ground in spotting in Juvenal's comparison between illnesses on the one side and classes of vices on the other a non-serious mode of exaggeration through incongruity.
After this one inverted and ironic departure from the physical effects of old age (let us call it a catalogue within a catalogue), Juvenal returns again to listing physical infirmities: of shoulder, loins, hips (227). Then second childhood is described, culminating in another grotesque simile, parallel to the earlier one on the Numidian ape (229–232), comparing the old man’s helplessness in acquiring food to the actions of a swallow’s chick. Finally, in rapid order come true senility, lapses in memory, total forgetfulness, terminating in a will which ends up in the possession of a mistress (an ex-prostitute besides!) who was acquired late in life.

Except for the ironic comparison between numbers of illnesses and numbers of vices as a way of overstating them both non-seriously, the passage is an accumulation of physical defects. The emphasis is on the natural and the physical, and any single incident is reasonable in the elderly: it is only the total portrait, working through strained epic diction, which seems so overdone as to be distorted. This is why Juvenal emphasizes lists and catalogues of infirmities which are physical and natural—to point out the quantity of things that can go wrong as a shocking counterstructure to those who would again substitute quantity of life (spatium vitae, 188) for quality of life. These grotesque, sensual, physical deformities are therefore accumulated into one intensely exaggerated list, in order to deflate empty wish-fulfillments. As a composite or unified conception judged for atmosphere, the description of the horrors of old age is clearly unrealistic, an exaggeration, but its function is certainly realistic: to jolt men out of unrealistic wishes that old age will somehow prove an attainable ideal—old age is attainable all right, Juvenal says, but it is no ideal.

Juvenal maintains this same emphasis on the physical and natural in the attack on “beauty” or forma (289–345), which here bears a reductive meaning of sexual attractiveness. To counter this wish-fulfillment, at one point Juvenal brings his reader back to reality with the threat of castration—a permanent and absolute impairment of the natural human capacity for sex—because of the large market for sexually attractive eunuch lovers. Juvenal here thus shows more than a flair for exaggeration; he has a way of deflating extravagance with an appropriate tactic. Castration is introduced into the argument not so that Juvenal can just be obscene or titillating, but to raise a disturbing counter-fantasy to the over-commitment by Juvenal’s contemporaries to unrealistic wishes for sexual powers.

The preceding observations about exaggeration apply more generally than to one poem. The Twelfth Satire, for instance, shares many features with the Tenth, but until recently it has been so universally condemned as a failure that its meaning and structure could not expect much except to be misunderstood. It is not to my purpose in this paper to reinstate the poem as a work of art,21 but only to make the local observation that with Juvenal’s elaborate description of captatio or “legacy-hunting” (83–130) we are certainly entering an atmosphere of overstatement. A climactic order is presupposed.

First, legacy hunters would sacrifice a whole hecatomb of elephants (hence, an exaggerated number of beasts of exaggerated proportions for a sacrifice), except that the only herd belongs to Caesar. Another feature of overstatement is the list of famous generals who were borne by the elephants into battle: Hannibal, Pyrrhus (who is identified by an epic periphrasis, 108), and Roman generals; and finally we see the elephant carrying whole cohorts on its back (with this we are sure the exaggeration is ironic). The elephant is also called “a tower going into battle” (turrem, 110, here an amphibology, since turris is the normal Latin word for the howdah on the back of an elephant). Hence, individual details only heighten our awareness of the general idea of exaggeration, inherent in sacrificing a whole hecatomb of something as large, rare, and expensive as an elephant.

But this particular climactic arrangement starts out high and gets higher progressively, for after elephants we are told that legacy hunters would even turn to human sacrifice, first a “herd” of slaves (sarcastic use of grex, 116), then even one’s own daughter, if necessary, as Agamemnon did with Iphigenia. Once again, Juvenal has chosen for his most overstated and unrealistic exemplum to cap the series with a literary one (I assume that tragicae in 120 directs us to think of tragedy specifically, and not myth or epic in general).

Again, this tremendously unrealistic series of exaggerations is not intended to give us a realistic portrayal of captatio, but to expose the increasing falseness and sterility which such artificial social institutions were producing to the detriment of true feelings between friends. Captatio is even worse than the pretense that one is after another’s money through the illusion of friendship, because it also involves a ridiculous and fantastic overevaluation of the rewards involved (“Nor do I compare a thousand ships to an inheritance,” 121 f., as Juvenal ironically puts it). In other words, captatio is not simply a moral vice for Juvenal, since his portrayal of its effect on the human imagination shows its true outrageous colors. It is the total perversion of the simple human capacity to evaluate what is worth doing that Juvenal is exploring in this passage and, in general, in this fourth book of satires. In the Twelfth, as in the Tenth Satire, his exaggerations point out that contemporary men are wasting their time and effort on the wrong goals.

21 My colleague E. S. Ramage accomplishes that purpose in “Juvenal, Satire 12: On Friendship True and False,” Illinois Classical Studies 3 (1978), 221–237, to whom I owe a debt for several of my ideas about this poem.

But it is now appropriate to turn back from these analyses of the satirist’s violent overstatements which contain ironic layers of meaning to Satire i, his first statement of the purpose of his art. I refer specifically to the satirist’s self-stated program of replacing the cliché-ridden epics and dramas prevalent in his own age with satire on the grand scale: a satire whose excesses are to mirror the extravagant excesses and perversions of contemporary life, and will for that reason be a “realistic” literature, since in its vices, and only in its vices, can contemporary Rome match the heroic scale of legendary epic. But at the end of his poem (147–171), Juvenal seemingly turns aside from this program, responds to an imaginary adversarius,22 and admits that a satirist cannot really write about actual contemporary life, since punishment is sure to be meted out by those in power.

It has troubled critics that Juvenal not only concedes his adversarius’ point, but caps his poem with the specific concession that he will direct his satire against those “whose ashes are covered by the Flaminian and Latin Ways (171).” Duff assumed this reference to the tombs of the wealthy and influential was a way for Juvenal to say his satire was directed against the aristocracy. But in addition this admission describes the actual historical (at least, “Domitianic”) environment of his poems.

Further, there is some implication that Juvenal’s insistence on the futility of literature in this and the Seventh Satire involved him in an ironic attitude toward his own artistic products. This is something more than the view that literature was a failure in his age. It is also the satirist’s self-critical awareness that his own satire was also doomed to inadequacy. Satire would not reform an age simultaneously decadent in ideas, literature, and politics; an age decadent in two dimensions—in its busy creation of sham new values, and in its arteriosclerotic maintenance of time-worn old ones. Thus, to explore the full impact of the last line of Satire i, we should understand it as a metaphor for Juvenal’s art. The “ghosts” which are assailed in his poems are more than the dead of history; the list must also include haunting nostalgic memories of virtues and ideals which had really not had authentic life for well over a century.

The range and variety of Juvenal’s exaggerations are truly impressive.

They cut across literary, rhetorical, philosophical, and mythological modes of expression, and thus it is unlikely that Juvenal’s artistry can be reduced to any single one of them without doing violence to the total fabric of his poems’ meaning. His exaggerations are best regarded as a special kind of satiric cognition, as one distinctive way of looking at the world in the satirist’s distorted way. Exaggerations are a way of focusing attention on reality by seemingly removing us clearly from it. Thus, after expanding to a great length on certain ideas and obsessions, Juvenal reaches a point of self-evident unreality, which pops the whole illusion. By breaking through intellectual illusions, we may be led back to a disillusioned sense of reality. It is this satirical structure of two alternating moments which I have called the “Irony of Overstatement.”

Indiana University
Satira and Satiricus in Late Latin

KENNETH M. ABBOTT

The title of this paper involves some kind of answer to the question whether the Latin satira as a literary type influenced satirical writing in general; or in short when, if ever, or at least before Sidonius Apollinaris,\(^1\) in whose work the lexicons recognize what becomes the usual Medieval Latin sense of "satire, satirical," the shift occurred which has left its mark on all modern languages in contact with the Latin tradition.

That Latin satira is not quite "satire" in the sense or senses which the vernacular languages inherit from Medieval Latin, no one, I think, really doubts. Dr. Johnson, to be sure, could still speak of satire as "a poem in which wickedness or folly is censured,"\(^2\) but this is both too narrow and too broad for Latin satira, and irrelevant to most modern satire. Latin satirical writing covers much more ground than satira; not all satira is satirical in tone, and I should hope that no Latinist would classify, say, The Tale of a Tub as satira. In whatever way it has been proposed to misunderstand Quintilian's satira tota nostra est (10,1,93), no one, I think, has ever thought he credited the Romans with the invention of satire but only satira. Important as it may be, however, for the history of Latin literature not to confuse satira and "satire," once the question of a distinction arises, difficulties or at least complexities immediately follow.

If defining satira would suggest St. Jerome's figure of trying to get a firm grip on an eel,\(^3\) defining vernacular satire might well suggest what I

---

1 That a new sense, i.e., departure from the form of satira, does indeed occur in Sidonius, is by no means clear; where in Ep. 1,11 he speaks of satirographus and satira, a poema is under discussion; while satirice in Donatus on Eun. 232, if genuine, which is not beyond question, seems to mean "in the fashion of a writer of satira."

3 Praef. in Librum Job: ut si velis anguillam aut muraenulam strictis tenere manibus, quanto fortius presseris tanto citius elabitur.
have been told is an old country expression, “trying to nail a custard pie to a wall.” Satura at least is a major literary type in Latin, which arose at one time and place, and has, technically speaking, a limited history from the time of Lucilius to Juvenal; while “satire” has existed from time immemorial or since first men recognized that the opinions, habits or features of others were inferior to their own and consequently not conducive to the public good. The grammatical tradition of satura as a Latin literary type is clear enough, as succinctly stated in Diomedes: Satira dicitur carmen apud Romanos nunc quidem maledicum et ad carpenda hominum vitia archaeae comœdiae characteris compositum, quale scripsert Lucilius et Horatius et Persius.

Granted that the nunc quidem does little to assure a date for what is likely to be a traditional statement, it does clearly, with its contrast accent, indicate a realization that satura was not always satirical in tone, but that nowadays, i.e., at almost any time after Persius’s work was in circulation, the satirical tone is a distinguishing mark of what is still a carmen. When the term becomes extended to prose as well, what we may have is a shift from satura as a genre to the spirit and tone and perhaps the intent to tell the truth, whether with laughter as in Horace or with derision as in Persius and Juvenal, in the interest of some however vaguely envisaged public good. And if we may regard vernacular satire as a literary form, it may profitably be considered with the rhetorical background of persuasion as its goal—persuasion from a course of conduct or a set of views likely (whether or not designed) to darken public counsel.

If then we are looking for a point at which satura could be transferred from a form or literary type to writing in the satiric spirit no longer restricted to inheritance of a poetic tradition, it is with St. Jerome that it can be suspected as occurring. This indeed is the argument of David Wiesen in his full study of St. Jerome as a satirist, with which Hritzu,

That there is a vast amount of satire in all its aspects in Jerome’s work, no one could doubt. Cavallera, in his comprehensive biography of St. Jerome, had already gathered numerous samples in his Index, under the head Satirique (esprit) de Jérôme, and no one could read far in any of his works without having it forcibly brought to his attention. So much is true even if, as I should insist on doing, one excludes from this satiric spirit mere invective and abuse. Of this there is much to be found without searching. But where we are regarding satire as a literary form or device with the rhetorical background of persuasion in written form, invective and abuse are hardly to be regarded as belonging. In any case, invective, as he said, came to him from the influence of Cicero's and Demosthenes' Philippics, and hardly shows the influence of Latin composers of satira. In fact, if one were to deny any considerable debt of Jerome to the Latin satirists, one could certainly subtract much on the ground of his temperament (which was hardly saintly in any modern sense), his hasty temper, a constant tendency to dramatize and exaggerate, which was hardly tempered by his admirable rhetorical education, and, by no means least, the hostilities and disappointments he encountered.

4 1.485,30 Keil. Diomedes does allow for satura in other senses, but dramatic satura, if it ever existed (which I doubt), has no relevance here, nor does the so-called Menippean satire or Cylica (Aul. Gell. 2.18.6).

Much that might account for his becoming embittered, for those who wish to argue that he did become so, certainly sprang from a temperament that past ages would have called perfervid. His response to criticism or dissent was rapid and violent to a degree which not only made him enemies but sometimes pained his friends. His support of virginity and the ascetic life in his Adversus Jovinianum aroused so much opposition in Rome through the apparent denigration of marriage and the normal Christian life, that his school friend, the senator Pammachius, was alarmed by the public reaction and attempted in vain to buy up and suppress the version in circulation. Cavallera, in fact, in his Appendix (Note P, pp. 103-115) devotes 13 pages to a digest of what he calls the Tribulations of St. Jerome; and J. Brochet's older book on the enemies of St. Jerome does not suffer from a want of material.

After his education at Rome and experience with religious communities at Aquileia and Emona (Ljubljana), whose devotion to religion very nearly matched his own, he had written, "my native country [Stridon in Dalmatia], where rusticity is at home, has the belly as its god. There they live from day to day; the richest is the most saintly. 'The pot,' according to a proverbial expression, ‘has a lid worthy of itself,’ the bishop Lupicinus.” It is perhaps no marvel that sinister stories emanating from an “Iberian viper” at Stridon, as Jerome called him, had driven Jerome into exile. He had also quarreled with his aunt Castorina (Letter 13, A.D. 375–376), to whom he wrote demanding rather than seeking a reconciliation. He complains of hearing no news from Stridon, suggesting estrangement from his entire family. Nor did he find things much better in his retirement to the desert of Chalcis. There he not only found the monks barbarous, but their theological disputes harried him to such an extent that he had to leave and return to Antioch. When his life of Paul of Thebes, the earliest, in his view, of the desert saints, first began to circulate, his opponents, not without reason, maintained that that saint had never existed. Jerome responded, in his life of Hilarion, ten or more years later (ca. 389–392), with his customary heat, that he would pass by these dogs of Scylla with his ears stopped up. This confounding of the story of the Sirens with the monster Scylla would arouse little interest in the crowded history of mythological garbling, but what is noteworthy is that Jerome did indeed know better, yet indulged his anger at the expense of his knowledge. As a very generous critic very gently put it, “he did not intend to leave his opponents a monopoly of invective,” and rarely in his prefaces, in the years that followed, did he fail to refer to his literary enemies, as here, as reptiles, birds and beasts whose habits and character were to be deplored. A fair sample perhaps is in Preface to Hebr. Quaest. in Genesim (PL 23, 983K), “those filthy sows who grunt against me, parvum homunculum.”

---

7 The influence of Demosthenes here may be more decorative than historical, but of Cicero there is no doubt.

9 Letter 7,5 (A.D. 375-376), from the desert at Calchis, in about his 27th year: In mea enim patria rusticitatis vernacula deus venter est et de die vivitur: sanctior est ille qui ditiior est. Accessit huic patellae iuxta tritum populi sermone proverbiurn dignum opercumm, Lupicinun sacerdos—secundum illud quoque, de quo semel in vita Crassum ait risisse Lucilius: "similem habent labra lactuim asino cardus comedente..."

When a council was convened at Rome in 382, he gladly returned there and became the friend, adviser and protégé of Pope Damasus. But risen to prominence and having perhaps some hopes of succeeding to the papacy (who hoped so is not clear), he had accumulated enemies numerous and powerful enough to force him once more to choose to go to Bethlehem (from 385 on), never to return to Rome. Thus from the age of about 40 for the next thirty years he lived the ascetic life of a monk, the life he had so ardently promoted from his early years and so vigorously, if not voluntarily, demanded of others as the true Christian life. Still from his retreat poured forth not only works of scholarship but also of controversy, which inflamed more hostility in those with whom he disagreed or whom he held up to ridicule. He found few to commend but many and much to condemn, and in response to criticism he pointed out (Hebr. Quaest. in Gen.) that Terence, Vergil, Cicero had all been criticized too, in spite of their eminence. In his life of Malchus, written shortly after his final withdrawal from Rome, in a preface full of bitterness, he described this narrative as a practice run in preparation for a history of the Church, “from the coming of the Saviour to our times, that is,” he says, “from the apostles to the dregs of our time—by whom the Church was born and grew, increased by persecutions, was crowned with martyrdoms, and after it came to the Christian emperors became greater in power and wealth, but less in virtue.”

10 Vita Sancti Hilarionis 1: . . . maledicorum voce contemptimimus, qui olim detrahentes Paulo meo, nunc forsitan detrahent et Hilarioni, illum solitudinis calumniati, huic obicientes frequentiam: ut qui semper latuit, non fuisse: qui a multis visus est, vili existimetur. Fecerunt hoc et maiores eorum quondam Pharisaei, quibus nec Iohannis heremus atque ieiunium, nec Domini Salvatoris turbae, cibi, potusque placuerunt. Verum destinato operi imponam manum, et Scyllaeos canes obturatae auro transibo.

11 Cavallera I, 133.

12 Non mirum ergo si contra me parvum homunculum immundae sues grunniant.

This projected history he never finished, but certainly his numerous and vigorous strictures left the impression that the clergy of his time was in many cases corrupt, ignorant, debauched and greedy, as well as quarrelsome. The exaggeration is obvious enough; although at least some of the clergy strongly opposed Jerome’s propaganda for monasticism and asceticism, their objections were serious enough, and the charges he makes against some smack of fiction, as in his accusation of those who get up early to start potations and continue to drink until evening. Furthermore, the whole list of these vices, drunkenness and gluttony among the rich and powerful in particular, repeat the traditional themes of satura and suggest adaptations from literature. In particular, his attacks on women, from which it has been argued that pagan antifeminism became part of medieval tradition, raise a question as to how far his zeal for reform in the Church and mankind as a whole has not drawn him into intensification of literary themes. How much observation can really lie behind these scandalous charges? In any case, his response to criticism, more in anger than in sorrow, did (even when he was clearly in the right, as in the attacks made on his biblical translations) result in bitter quarrels, rupture of old friendships, and even, towards the end of his life, grave personal danger. His vigorous attacks on Pelagianism, in fact, aroused the Palestinian monks of that persuasion to attack his monasteries, and Jerome, as well as his monks and nuns, barely escaped being murdered.

13 Vita Malchi Captivi 1: Scribere enim disposui (si tamen vitam Dominus dederit, et si vitupera tores mei saltim fugiement me et clausum persequi desierint) ab adventu Salvatoris usque ad nostram aetatem, id est ab apostolis usque ad huias temporis fessem, quomodo et per quos Christi ecclesia nata sit et adulta, persecutionibus creverit, martyrrib corona sit; et postquam ad Christianos principes veneri, potentia et divitis maior, sed virtutibus minor facta sit.

14 Wiesen, Chapter III, “The Church and the Clergy,” deals fully with the subject.

15 Wiesen, p. 108. Commentary on Isaiah, PL 24, 83C.

16 E.g., P. Delhaye, in Medieval Studies 13 (1951) 65–86.
In circumstances such as these and in the midst of such enmities, it might suffice to ascribe Jerome's satire to the bitterness of disappointed hopes and to his natural resentment at unjustified criticism, as manifested in the constant carping at his biblical translations, reaching a crescendo with his Old Testament translations from the Hebrew rather than from the Septuagint. But this would account only for the invective, and not for the obvious literary character of much of his satire. For instance, if his attacks on the clergy of his own day may be said to be something new and based on observation, yet it is the princes of the church in the main that he attacks, and attacks on the same grounds (such as drunkenness, lechery and particularly gluttony) that the rich and powerful are ridiculed for in the earlier literature. The very traditional character of these charges suggests that their sources are in part literary, exaggerated in turn by his very genuine zeal for reform of society in general and the Church in particular. Most specifically, what is hard not to call the antifeminism, so rampant in his writing, can hardly have been an accurate representation of those women who were his closest friends and stoutest supporters. It might be well to remember that he had, after all, passed most of his life away from Rome, and the latter part of it in semi-retirement, far from the bustle and perhaps the corruptions of city life. In fact, a dissertation on St. Jerome's observations on daily life by Sr. M. Jamesetta Kelley\(^17\) finds very little to collect. Jerome was, as was natural in his circumstances, an intensely bookish man, and to such an extent that Cavallera could demonstrate that what he professed to be a confession of his youthful sins, had in fact been lifted from his translation of a work of Origen.\(^18\) Is it fantastic to suggest that a man who can plagiarize his sins might not be the best guide to his own biography?

Jerome's devotion to classical literature might appear, of course, to have been interrupted (if hardly forever, at least for a considerable period, perhaps for as much as fifteen years) by his celebrated dream, recorded in Ep. 22,30. Yet I think no one after Arthur Stanley Pease's demonstration of 1919\(^19\) has maintained that he long kept the vow he there records; i.e., that from a tribunal on high he was judged, "Ciceronianus es, non Christianus. Ubi thesaurus tuis, ibi et cor tuum," and in his terror and pain at the beating he was receiving as punishment, swore more than was required, "Domine, si unquam habuero codices saeculares, si legero, te negavi." Famous as this dream is, in the innumerable discussions it is often forgotten what this punishment was to correct: not so much the reading of classical authors, as to count these as his treasures while rejecting religious texts as uncouth because of their sermo . . . incultus.\(^\text{20}\) The significance of the dream, then, is not so much a rejection of Cicero, Vergil and other pagan authors, as a turning to Christian scholarship, in which his censor had found him wanting. Letter 22 probably dates from 384, and the dream some ten years earlier. During these years and for sometime following, Jerome had to perfect himself in Greek and acquire a grasp of Hebrew for his translations and commentaries. This work would certainly leave him little time for reading for pleasure, and he writes with regret of what the neglect of the Latin classics had done to his style, in his commentary on Galatians (PL 26, 399C): “all elegantia of speech and venustas of Latin eloquence had been defiled by the stridor (hissing) of Hebrew reading.” And gives one reason:\(^\text{21}\) “For you know,” he says to the noble ladies Marcella, Paula and Eustochium, to whom he addresses his work, “that it has been more than fifteen years since Cicero, Vergil or any pagan author has come into my hands. And if it happens that, when we are speaking, anything of that sort creeps in, it is as if we remember an ancient dream through a cloud.”

\(^{17}\) Life and Times as Revealed in the Writings of St. Jerome Exclusive of the Letters (Catholic University of America Patristic Studies, 70), Washington, 1944.

\(^{18}\) Cavallera II, 72–75.

In any case, the most thorough study of St. Jerome’s references by Harald Hagendahl has shown, more fully than previous work, the great extent of Jerome’s indebtedness to classical Latin authors. As for the satirists, Hagendahl is certainly correct in observing of Jerome’s treatise against Jovinian, and its reminiscences of Persius, “I think we may safely conclude that Jerome at that time [i.e., in 393, nine years after Ep. 22] intentionally renewed his acquaintance with the Stoic poet.”\(^\text{22}\) Jerome has in common with the satirists not only the traditional themes but also, very frequently, the use of historical or fictitious names to designate his opponents, in order to give the impression that it is the sin and not the sinner he is aiming at: for instance, Luscius Lanuvinus (Lavinius?) as a pseudo-\(^{20}\) Bibliothea . . . carere non poteram [at Jerusalem]. Itaque miser ego lecturus Tullium ieiunabam. Post noctum crebras vigilias, post lacrinas, quas mihi praepteritorem recordatio pecatorum ex imis visceribus eruebat, Plautus sumebatur in manibus. Si quando in memet reversus prophetam legere coepisset, sermo horrebat incultus et, quia lumen caecis oculis non videbam, non oculorum putabam culpam esse, sed solis.

\(^{21}\) Sed omnem sermonis elegantiam et Latini eloqui venustatem stridor lectionis Hebraicae sordidavit. Nostis enim et ipsae quod plus quam quindecim anni sunt ex quo in manus meas nunquam Tullius, nunquam Maro, nunquam gentilium litterarum quiilibet auctor ascendit: et si quid forte inde dum logumur obrepit, quasi antiqui per nebulam sonnii recordamur. Quod autem proceriin ex linguae illius infatigabili studio, aliorum iudicio derelinquo: ego quid in mea amiserim scio.

\(^{22}\) Harald Hagendahl, Latin Fathers and the Classics (Studia Graeca et Latina Gothoburgensia, VI). Göteborg, 1948, 145.
nym for an opponent. More than that: if the range of subject, sharpness of tone and, what is perhaps even more striking, the wide range in levels of style and language suggest saturna as in some way offering models, with these the diffuse unity of the sermo would fit. That his connection of his satire with saturna is conscious is, I think, indicated in two passages, which Wiesen also discusses. The first of these is contained in the famous Letter 22,32, telling of a rich hypocritical woman and her vicious treatment of an old hag trying to collect alms twice; to which he adds, nomina taceo, ne saturam putes, as if it fit otherwise the requirements of the genre. And in Letter 40,1, addressed to a certain Onasus (clearly a pseudonym), he says, "You claim that you are the one I am pointing out in my comments, and you call me into court and foolishly charge me with being a writer of satire (satiricum scriptorem) in prose." Interpretations of these somewhat ambiguous remarks differ; but clearly, in the first case, all that distinguishes some of Jerome’s work from historical Latin saturna in his eyes is that he does not dramatize by introducing a cast of names, which saturna normally does. In the second case, "you foolishly charge" seems clear enough, because a charge of slander or libel will not lie when the plaintiff is not clearly identified.

Thus, on what scanty material is left us, it would appear that Jerome consciously chose what he felt was the spirit, tone and dramatic vivacity of saturna in Horace and Persius, at least, and interpreted saturna as now meaning the manner and the matter but not the form, thus giving impetus to new movements to come. That the carmen-aspect was overlooked, may still seem strange; but it is noteworthy that the one comedy surviving from this period is in prose, even though a kind of rhythmical prose. And I have argued elsewhere that the so-called verse of Commodian is not verse, quantitative or accentual, but prose poetry. I do not know whether there is any connection to be found here; but the whole problem of novelty versus tradition in the Late Latin period awaits an answer.

The Ohio State University

23 Liber Hebr. Quaest. in Genesim, Praefatio, PL 23, 955A.
Disiecta Membra: On the Arrangement of Claudian’s Carmina minora

GEORG LUCK

In our manuscripts and editions the order of Claudian’s Carmina minora varies considerably, and the arrangement adopted by Th. Birt (Monumenta Germaniae historica: Auctores antiquissimi, vol. 10, 1892) and M. Platnauer (Loeb Classical Library, 2 vols., 1922, reprinted 1963) has no more authority, I think, than that of J. M. Gesner (1759). But since Birt, in his long Praefatio, claims to have discovered the arrangement closest to that of the archetype, we shall examine its merits first. It is based on the Mediceus, a fifteenth century codex which derives from an “antiquus codex” and is found, with minor variations, in the Ambrosianus, also fifteenth century, and about twenty other witnesses. Before reaching any conclusions we must survey the poems from the point of view of their content and their literary form. This paper will be partly a catalogue of the extant poems, but since they are hardly read nowadays except perhaps by a few specialists, such a survey is necessary. I realize how sketchy my contribution is, but a great deal of work is needed. For one thing, the text is corrupt in many places. Birt’s text is far too conservative, his own conjectures are often rash and implausible.

The first group of poems in Birt’s edition includes eight pieces, mainly of the descriptive genre. The very first piece repeats verbatim one of the four Fescennina which form a sort of varied prelude to the Epithalamium of Honorius and Maria. Was it lifted out of that context and placed here because it is the shortest of the four? But any of the others might have qualified as a “short poem.” It is certainly an ingenious compliment to Stilicho, and his name is only mentioned here. Whoever put this piece at the head of the Carmina minora must have understood it as a tribute to Stilicho, perhaps the shortest in Claudian’s oeuvre.

Number 2 is the description of a harbor. Why it should be the harbor of Smyrna (according to the lemma in some manuscripts) or Sarona (according to the lemma in the "vetus Cuiacii") is not clear. In some cases (see below, on No. 12) a lemma seems to have information which is not found in the poem itself; but this may be guesswork. These few lines could be a topos to be inserted into a longer poem where needed. There must be some connection between this and No. 5 (see below).

Number 3 is altogether different: four lines addressed to Aeternalis, the proconsul of Asia of A.D. 396 and apparently a patron of Claudian's, for the poet calls him meus . . . Apollo (v. 4; cf. Birt, Praefatio, p. XIV). The text of v. 3, as given in Birt and Platnauer, is unsatisfactory. The point of the poem is that Claudian can only speak in verse (cf. Ovid, Tristia 4,10,23–26), because he is inspired by his Apollo, Aeternalis, just as the oracle at Delphi, inspired by Apollo, is given in verse. Read: carmina sunt, nam verba negant communia Musae (non Heinsius ex codd.: sed vulgo). Claudian contrasts poetry (carmina) and prose (verba communia). The vulgar sed makes sense but lacks point, and non, found by Heinsius in some manuscripts, clashes with the beginning of the next lines: carmina sola loquor. The poem looks like the dedication of a collection of Claudian's poems to Aeternalis, but what texts would have been included? All the Carmina minora? Or just the ones dealing with ordinary subjects—subjects that someone else would write about in prose, such as No. 10, De birro castoreo? Number 4 is the description of a handsome bull: the lemma Descriptio armenti or armentorum is clearly misleading and probably read out of the last word of v. 1, armentorum.1

Number 5 presents the same kind of problem as No. 2. In the "Excerpta Florentina" (15th cent.) it has the lemma Est in conspectu longo locus, probably a hint that these four lines are a variation on a Virgilian theme (Aeneid 1,159–168), but Virgil wrote est in secessu longo locus. A scribe or editor perhaps recognized the parallel but quoted from memory. It is also possible that this piece originally was connected with No. 2, which begins with the words Urbs in conspectu. But the beginning of No. 2 is almost certainly corrupt, and probably should be restored as Pricaeus and Heinsius had suggested: Urbs conspectum montana cacumina vallant | tranquillo praetenta mari. Perhaps Nos. 2 and 5 are fragments torn from the same contest—a safe harbor and the city which it serves—or else they are variations on a passage in the Aeneid, to be inserted into a longer poem. Poets must have kept such patches for future use, just as Cicero had his collection of praefationes. Number 6 is similar: a variation on Virgilian themes (Aeneid 1,148–150 and 7,503–508). The lemma in some manuscripts reads rimanti telum ira factit, an exact quotation of Virgil, Aeneid 7.508. Did the poet himself supply this piece of information? Or did a reader note the reminiscence in the margin (see above, No. 2)?

1 In v. 12 read praestassent (praestarent "vetus Cuiacii" : portassent vulgo).

Number 7 is separated by Birt into two poems of four lines each. Both of them celebrate a marble sculpture: a chariot with four horses and the driver, all made from one block. This is the typical ephrasis of a work of art, perhaps a well-known monument in Rome. Birt compares Anth. Pal. 9.759 (Ἀθέσσατον) and 760 (Ἀλαο), both consisting of one line only, both almost identical, with minor variations. Number 8, De Polycaste et Perdicca, is about the incestuous love of a mother for her son. There are different variations of this story in other sources, but the lemma is questionable: nothing indicates that Claudian refers to the young hunter Perdiccas and his mother Polycaste (or Polycarpe). The text is corrupt: in v. 1 read flammatum (Heinsius) for flammum; in v. 2 read sanguinis, heu, fetum . . . timens for sanguinis effetum . . . timet; and in v. 6 read consule iam Veneri for c.i. Venerem.

Number 9, De hystrice, could be part of a series on animals (cf. Nos. 18; 27; 42; 49; Appendix, No. 9, etc.). Claudian was clearly fascinated by the strange variety in the animal world. Number 10, De birro castoreo, a satiric epigram in the style of Martial, describes a shabby old overcoat made of beaver’s fur. The coat was never worth much (sex solidi was apparently very cheap for such a garment at this time), but now it is only a shadow of its former self: nominis umbra manet veteris (mock-heroic after Lucan 1.135, stat magni nominis umbra, of Pompeius Magnus).

Number 11, In sepulchrum speciosae, could be inspired by a funeral monument, perhaps a statue that Claudian saw somewhere along a highway. It could also have been intended as the epitaph itself; though the name of the woman is missing, it could have been inscribed somewhere else on the monument. But the epigram might be purely literary; cf. Iulianus Aegyptius, Anth. Pal. 7.599. Number 12, De balneis Quintianis quae in via posita erant. The name of Quintius is not mentioned in the poem; hence the lemma either preserves independent information or is based on guesswork (see above, on No. 2). Again, it is not impossible that Claudian was asked to compose an inscription for this bath-house along the highway; the name of the benefactor might have been found on another part of the building.

Number 13 attacks a critic who claimed that Claudian’s verse did not scan properly: “claudicat hic versus; haec,” inquit, “syllaba nutat.” Hence, he concluded, totum carmen non stat. These must be technical terms used by ancient metricians, and from that point of view the poem is quite important. Claudian replies that the critic is unable to read verse; he is therefore podager. This does not mean, of course, that the critic actually suffers from gout; it means that something is wrong with his "feet," i.e., the meter of Claudian's verses as he reads them. He actually "butchers" them, Claudian says (at the end of v. 2 read lacerans for laceras, following the edition of P. Burman the Younger, 1760). Number 14 is a brief poetic thank-you note for some honey which Maximus had sent him. Numbers 15 and 16 are two Latin versions of the anonymous epigram Anth. Pal. 5,50, which is attributed by some critics to Claudian himself. These are literary exercises.

---

Number 17 celebrates the statues of the two brothers who carried their parents to safety from a burning house. Claudian apparently saw these statues in or near Catina (Catania) on Sicily, and he praises the work of art no less than the act of pietas which it commemorates. During an eruption of Mt. Aetna, a miracle happened: the masses of hot lava stopped at this very monument, as if in awe of such devotion. The story is told elsewhere in different versions, e.g., in Ps.–Aristotle, De mundo 400 a 34–b 6: here the lava stream separates to spare the two living brothers and their burden. Henceforth the place was called εὐσέβειον χῶρος, piorum locus. The text is greatly in need of restoration: read, e.g., in v. 35 patri for pater (with A), and in v. 42 dicabit for dicavit (with R and Heinsius).

Number 18, on a team of Gallic mules and their trainer, describes some kind of a circus act. Claudian is astonished at the skill and obedience of the animals. He notes that the trainer gives his commands in his native tongue, a Celto–Roman dialect (barbarici . . . soni, v. 8 = Gallica verba, v. 20). This could have been written anywhere, not necessarily on a trip through Gaul.

Number 19 is a short epistle in verse to Gennadius, the prefect of Egypt in 396 who seems to have lived in Ravenna after his retirement. Gennadius had asked for some of Claudian's poems, and is now told that none are left at home:

Nam mihi mox nidum pennis confisa reliquunt et lare contempto non reditura volant.

Claudian compares his poems to young birds who have learned to fly and are eager to leave their nest, i.e., to reach the person who has commissioned them or to whom they are dedicated. Claudian's poetry is, to a large extent, poésie d'occasion, written to celebrate a certain event or a person, composed for a special κοινός. Even if Claudian kept—as he must have—a copy of his "official" poems, this was hardly the kind of thing Gennadius wanted: he probably was hoping for a more personal kind of poem, and this is what he gets, though it is quite short. Birt concludes from this poem that Claudian did not make a collection of his own works. This may be true, but the poem itself does not support it. Number 20 is a charming piece, often quoted, on an old man of Verona who—unlike Claudian—had never left his home.

Number 21 attacks two high officials of opposite temper, Flavius Mallius Theodorus and Rufius Synesius Hadrianus: one is too lazy, the other hyper-active. Theodorus was consul in 399, but before that time, it would appear, had dedicated himself for years to philosophy and agriculture (Claudian 17, 138; 174 ff.). Hadrianus held the office of praefectus praetorio of Italy in 401–405 and apparently used his power to enrich himself. Claudian managed, in one short epigram, to offend two influential men at the same time, but Mallius seems to have forgiven him, while Hadrian, furious, demanded an apology (No. 22, immediately following), which turned out more than ten times as long as the offending poem. One cannot help wondering what the occasion may have been. Perhaps both men were candidates for a political office, and Claudian made it clear that he thought them both unfit, for different reasons. Number 22 is the deprecatio for the preceding attack on Hadrianus, a piece so humble and abject in tone that—like so many ancient poems of flattery—it seems almost ironical. And yet, I suppose, that was the required attitude, and Claudian may have been forced to write it under pressure from Stilicho; at least that is what the title in M (the catalogue) suggests: excusatio pro se ad Stilichonem. Number 23 is also a deprecatio, also addressed to a political figure, the quaestor Alethius, but without political character. Claudian had been critical of Alethius’ poetry; Alethius was hurt, and Claudian, appearing very remorseful and contrite, promises from now on to praise everything Alethius writes. The way in which Alethius is compared to Homer and Virgil (vv. 15 f.) would indicate that the whole poem is not meant seriously. There is a thread connecting poems 21–23: an attack on two political figures; the apology addressed to one of them; an apology addressed to a third politician, but the attack itself is missing. This short series, however, is separated from related poems (attacks on Claudian, or Claudian’s attacks on others: Nos. 13; 50).

Number 24 is a brief (fragmentary?) description of a lobster, probably not a living one but a cooked specimen on the table. It may be compared with Appendix, No. 3 (see below), with which it is connected in the Vaticanus 2809 (12th cent.). Number 25 is a long Epithalamium for Palladius and Celerina, similar to the Laus Sereiae (No. 30) and the Epithalamium

4 Prosopography (above, n. 3), I, 406; O. Seeck, RE 7 (1912), 2178.

5 Prosopography, I, 39.
for Honorius (among the "official" poems). Both epithalamia have an elegiac praefatio followed by hexameters. One might ask, why this was not included among the "official" poems (see below, on No. 30). Perhaps because it is relatively short, although it is one of the longest texts in the Carmina minora. Could it be unfinished?

Four poems dealing with scientific lore follow. Number 26 praises the hot mineral springs of Aponos (Abano, near Padua). Obviously the poet had visited the place; perhaps he had even taken the waters there. He saw the many graffiti and other inscriptions of grateful patients, some in crude verse. This must be the meaning of v. 4, cum tibi plebeius carmina dictet honos, not "seeing . . . that a people's love bids poets to honour thee in song," as Platnauer translates. Number 27, on the Phoenix, follows Herodotus 2.73, and is partly mythological, partly epideictic or allegorical: the fabulous bird stands for immortality. Number 28 celebrates the Nile, and seems to be incomplete (J. J. Scaliger, F. Buecheler). Though Claudian was born in Egypt he follows literary models, such as Herodotus 2.20 ff.; Seneca, Nat. quaest. 4.1 ff.; Lucan 10,194–331. Number 29, on the magnet, blends science and mythology.

Laus Serenae (No. 30) should be added to Claudian’s "official" poems (as should No. 25), and one is surprised to find it here. Again, it may be unfinished. Serena is Theodosius’ niece and adoptive daughter, and Stilicho’s wife (ca. 384–408). In the charming passage vv. 132–139 there is a textual problem:

\[
\begin{align*}
Ambas (\text{sc. sorores}) & \text{ ille quidem patrio complexus amore,} \\
& \text{sed merito pietas in te proctivior ibat;} \\
& \text{et quotiens, rerum moles ut publica cogit,} \\
& \text{tristior aut ira tumidus flagrante redibat,} \\
& \text{cum patrem nati fugerent atque ipsa timeret} \\
& \text{commotum Flaccilla virum, tu sola frementem} \\
& \text{frangere, tu blando poteras sermone mederi.} \\
& \text{Alloquis haerere tuis, secreta fidelis.} \\ \end{align*}
\]

Theodosius loves both Serena and her sister Thermantia; but Serena is his favorite. Even when he is depressed or angry, even when his two sons, ArcADIUS and Honorius, and his wife Flaccilla are afraid to talk to him, he will listen to Serena. She alone can put him in good mood; and he tells her state secrets. That much is clear. But the transition from 138 to 139 is difficult, and it seems possible that one or two lines had fallen out, as Heinsius suggested. Or else v. 139 is the beginning of a period which Claudian left unfinished. Apparently there is something missing also at 6 Prosopography 1, 824; O. Seeck, RE 2A (1923), 1672 ff.

7 fidelis codd. : fateri Birt.
the end of the poem, for the "Excerpta Gyraldina" note: In exemplari antiquo scriptum est in fine "hic deest," quod est verisimile. There are some unusual corruptions in the text, too; perhaps it was preserved in a not easily legible autograph. We have asked the question, why were Nos. 25 and 30 not included among Claudian's "official" poems? The answer may be: because both were unfinished. This, of course, would affect their chronology. The place of the Epistula ad Serenam (No. 31), immediately after the Laus, is logical (though they are separated from each other in some manuscripts, and some preserve the Epistula without the Laus). The Epistula is more personal. We hear that Claudian, though painfully aware of his poverty (45 f.), was encouraged by Serena to propose to a young woman in North Africa. The letter seems to have been written immediately before the poet's marriage, to which, because of the distance, he cannot invite Serena. Vollmer8 and Seeck9 think the poem was written during Claudian's honeymoon and that he died soon afterward.

Number 32, De Salvatore, is a poetic paraphrase of the beginning of the Gospel according to St. John. It is comparable to the Laus Christi, Appendix, No. 20. Numbers 33–39 are seven epigrams on a crystal enclosing a drop of water. To those may be added two Greek epigrams by Claudian on the same subject (Anth. Pal. 9,753 and 754). This crystal obviously fascinated him and gave him an ideal opportunity to show his talent of deriving ever new ideas from the same theme. Numbers 40 and 41, the letters to Olybrius and his younger brother Probinus, resemble each other: both urge a friend to write soon (cf. Ovid, Tristia 4.7 and 5.13). The two brothers are also connected in Claudian's Panegyricus dictus Probino et Olybrio consulibus. The two letters stand next to each other in all manuscripts. Number 42, De afro et leone, appears to be unfinished; one would expect to hear about the outcome of the fight. Numbers 43 and 44 are invectives against Curetius. In 43 Curetius is introduced as the whoring son of a fraudulent astrologer (whose name, Uranius, is as fanciful as is the family tree of the astrologer in Propertius 4.1), and in 44 his vices are explained in terms of his father's art, i.e., through an interpretation of his own horoscope. Number 45: On the shell in which Serena used to wash her face. We learn that she wrote poetry.

The following poems are all connected with Honorius and his favorite horse. Number 46 is ostensibly written to accompany a cloak and a bridle given to Honorius by Serena: the cloak was her own work. Number 48 celebrates a strap for the horse embroidered by Serena. And No. 47, addressed to the horse, makes clear what valuable gifts the bridle, the collar, the strap, and the blanket woven of gold and purple are (the strap must be the same strap as the one in No. 48). In this series we are not told specifically about the collar and the blanket (the chlamys of No. 46 must be for the horseman rather than the horse), but we can assume that they too were the gifts of Serena. The order of these poems, the same in all manuscripts (though 48 is missing in some witnesses) is misleading and could not possibly, I believe, have been planned by the poet. The address to the horse (No. 47) anticipates the gift of the strap which is introduced more elaborately in the following poem (No. 48). There is another problem: it is by no means certain that 46 and 47 are separate poems; Mommsen, for instance, thought them to form one piece. In this case the most natural order would be: 48, 46, 47. The lemma of No. 48, De zona equi regii missa Honorio Augusto a Serena, is more specific than those of 46, De chlamyde et frenis, and 47, De equo dono dato (a bizarre way of saying de donis equo datis). But the lemmata vary in the manuscripts: some do introduce the name of Honorius ad 46. The problem is complicated by the fact that another poem belonging here appears detached from the series in most witnesses (it follows 48 in the Veronensis), and was put into the Appendix by Birt (No. 4, see below). We can see that this short series of poems which are obviously related presented difficulties to the ancient editors.

8 RE 3 (1899), 2655 (s.v. Claudianus).

Number 49, De torpedine (the electric ray), could be associated with Nos. 9, 18, etc. (see above). Number 50, often discussed because of its references to Christianity, attacks a certain Iacobus, commander of the cavalry, who had criticized Claudian’s poetry. Claudian hits back as hard as he can, and denounces Iacobus as a coward and drunkard (cf. the methods of denigration in Nos. 13, 43, and 44). Whether a poem of this kind was ever published, is doubtful. Such poems are written to let off steam and to be shown to a few intimate friends. Number 51 is on the planetarium of Archimedes. Number 52, De lanario, a miniature cento, is missing in four important manuscripts (omitted in Platnauer’s edition). Perhaps it is a torso as well as a cento. Neither the title nor the text have been explained so far. Could it be an improvisation, or some kind of a riddle? Number 53 (52 in Platnauer), the Gigantomachia, is clearly unfinished.

Birt has not included the poems of the so-called Appendix carminum minorum in the scheme which he proposes. The very existence of this Appendix, as indicated above, makes the problem with which we are concerned, almost insoluble. The poems of the Appendix are similar in character to the Carmina minora discussed above, but they are missing in some of the main manuscripts; therefore, their authenticity has been doubted, and they have received even less attention than the Carmina minora. A few of the poems are in the Veronensis (9th cent.; R), some are in the Vaticanus 2809 (12th cent.; V), but some are known only from early editions. Almost all of them, however, show Claudian’s elegance in style and versification.

Appendix, No. 1, In Sirenas, stands in R after Carmina minora 49, De torpedine. A series of oxymora makes it a remarkable tour de force: the Sirens are dulcia monstr, | bland pericla maris, terror ... gratus in undis (vv. 3 f.), and the death they bring is sweet for their victims: nec dolor ullus erat: mortem dabat ipsa vuluptas (19). Number 2, Laus Herculis, follows the Gigantomachia (C.min. 53) in R. With its 137 lines it is the longest poem of the Appendix. But it is incomplete: only three out of Heracles’ twelve (or twenty) labours are told. Like the Gigantomachia it is the torso of a rather ambitious project. The style is reminiscent of Callimachus’ hymns. Number 3, De dulcio, consists of just one line: Nectar e muro dulces cinguntur harenæ. This must be a kind of dessert, described in mock-heroic style: a sweet powdery substance surrounded by ripe grapes. In V it comes after C.min. 24, De lucusta. Are these pieces from a catalogue-poem describing the menu of a memorable banquet, from the hors d’oeuvre to the sweet? Number 4, De zona missa ab eadem (sc. Serena) Arcadio Augusto: If Serena, as we have seen above, had embroidered a strap for Honorius’ horse, it is quite probable that she also made one for his brother’s horse. In V the poem comes after C.min. 48. It is also preserved in M (Ambrosianus M 9, 13th cent.). Why is it missing in other manuscripts? Perhaps because they have the character of anthologies and do not attempt to collect the whole work of the poet.

Number 5, Epithalamium Laurentii, is rejected in the strongest terms by Birt (Praefatio, p. CLXVI), along with Nos. 6–8. A Laurentius is attested as comes rerum privatarum in the Eastern part of the Empire on 24 April 396. Whether the poem is genuine or not, it seems a very fine work of art, not just a conventional wedding-poem. Aldhelm knew and admired it. The description of a late Roman orchestra, as it performed at the wedding (vv. 60–63), will be of interest, not only to musicologists:

60 Tympana, chorda simul symphonia, tibia, buxus, cymbala, bambylium11 corun, aes,12 fistula, sistrum, quaeque per aeratas inspirant carmina fauces,13 humida folligenis exclamant14 organa ventis.15

10 O. Seeck, RE 12 (1925), 1015.
11 bambylium is Buecheler’s conjecture for bambium VM. Birt proposed bombium, and this may well be right; but other forms, such as bamborium (Gramm. Lat. Keil 4,532.2), are attested too. It must have been a wood instrument with a deep humming sound, similar to the bassoon.
12 aes Birt: et VM. 13 fauces M. Haupt: voces VM.
14 exclamant VM, corr. G. Wernsdorf. 15 ventis L. Mueller: vocis V1 M.
The number of different wind instruments is impressive. Another passage (vv. 68–78) deserves to be mentioned: When the young couple has finally entered the bridal chamber, it is the duty of the promuba to take away the bride's jewelry, her pins, etc., as a measure of precaution; during the customary luctamen Veneris the girl might get carried away, play become earnest, and the man might get scratched or even seriously wounded.

Numbers 6, 7, and 8 are prayers for safe return from a trip abroad, one addressed to Bacchus, the other to Mars, the third (which is incomplete) to Juno. The lemmata (De Liberalibus; Laus Martis; De Iunonalibus) are entirely fanciful, and the whole evidence is presented in a misleading way by Birt. If the poems are given any title at all, it should be something like De reeditu ad Liberum; D. r. ad Martem; D. r. ad Iunonem. The composition is the same in all three poems: first an ἐρεταλογία of the divinity, then the prayer (da reeditum nobis, or da nobis reditum, for variety's sake, 7,11), and then, introduced by sic, the wish that something pleasing to the divinity may come true. Numbers 6 and 7 are preserved in V and three other sources; No. 8 is found in V only (perhaps it was incomplete in the common source of these witnesses).

Number 9, De hippopotamo et crocodilo, is similar to the animal poems among the Carmina minor. It is almost certainly incomplete, as the Schedae Peiresciannae of Vaticanus 9135 note. Number 10, De aquila quae in mensa de sardonyche lapide erat, is on a precious table, and can be compared to the ecphrasis of works of art (e.g., C.min. 7). Number 11, De Isidis navigio, is a prayer to Isis not to leave the country. Claudian was familiar with the cult of Isis (cf. Claudian 8, 570 ff.). The author of the poem calls her nostra dea (3). Number 12, De lavacro, is on a luxurious bathing establishment on the Black Sea (the poem is incomplete). Someone called Florens is invited to use these baths on a holiday. An Alexander and his mother are mentioned: this could be Alexander Severus and his mother Iulia Mammaea, as Birt observes. If so, then the poem could hardly be by Claudian, although it is most accomplished (the pleasures of a scented shower are described very gracefully, 6 ff.). Number 13, De Vinalibus, is on the Roman wine festival, which was celebrated on 22 April and 19 August (cf. No. 15 below, on the Floralia). The poem is probably incomplete. Number 14, De Cytherea: There are several textual difficulties, and the piece ends rather abruptly, but it seems to describe an epiphany of Venus, who visits the poet early one morning. Number 15, De cereo, is on the candles that were lit on the eve of the Floralia (on 28 April) and carried in a procession. Numbers 16–19: Only the titles are preserved in the catalogue of M. The scribe may have seen them in his exemplar, but he just copied the titles. They all dealt with animals (cf., e.g., C.min. 9). Number 20, Laus Christi, appears first in Camers’ edition (Vienna, 1510) along with No. 21. Birt deals with this and the following poem No. 21, Miracula Christi, at length in his Praefatio, pp. CLXX ff. Number 20 is incomplete (Scaliger), probably No. 21 as well (Gesner). Finally, No. 22, an epigram from Claude Binet’s codex Cuiacianus, first published in his edition of Petronius, is on a pederast who introduces a puer delicatus as his son. The text as printed by Birt is unsatisfactory: lines 9 f., separated from lines 1–8 by the editor, should be inserted between 4 and 5. Read puer for pater in v. 9 (with W.

Meyer), and hic for huic in the same line (with Patisson).

Before drawing any conclusions from this survey we should look briefly at the textual tradition of Claudian, because it affects our problem in various ways. For unknown reasons, Claudian’s unfinished epic De raptu Proser-pinae, as well as his panegyric on Probinus and Olybrius, became detached from the rest of his opus. For several centuries these two works had their own textual history. What we have of Claudian’s Latin poems seems to have been handed down in several lines: (1) Claudianus maior (or magnus), including his longer poems (without the Panegyricus on Probinus and Olybrius) and the Carmina minora, probably along with some of the poems in the Appendix. But the Veronensis 163 (R) represents a separate tradition of the Carmina minora.17 (2) Claudianus minor (or parvus), containing De raptu Proserpinae. (3) The Panegyricus on Probinus and Olybrius, separated from (1) probably because it did not concern Stilicho, but joined to Claudianus maior in the twelfth century, as it seems. The distinction between
(1) and (2) is simply based on the size of the codices: a volume containing only De raptu was of course much smaller than the volume with the rest of the works. This distinction is current in incipits and explicits of the manusscripts from the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries; it is also found in Vincent of Beauvais (Birt, p. LXXVII, n. 4).

Within (1), as we have seen, the order of the Carmina minora varies greatly. The Veronensis 163 (R), an important eighth century witness (though akephalos, it probably never included the long “official” poems), has them in the following order: C.min. 29 (starting with v. 34); 9; 17; 18; 20; 22; 23; 50; 49; App. 1; C.min. 51; 19; 40; 41; 32; 27; Lactantius’
Phoenix (same theme as the preceding piece); 3; 6; 10–16; 21; 31; 53;
App. 2; C.min. 46–48; 45. This is about half the number of poems included in Birt’s edition; this, and the fact that at least one piece by another author is included, would characterize R as an anthology rather than part of a complete edition. Though the arrangement is quite different, the series C.min. 9–23 and 45–51 are represented in both collections: R and V (Vaticanus 2809). This seems to indicate that the scribe of V made a selection from a larger corpus. He went through it more than once, adding poems that he had left out previously. 18

According to Birt’s survey (p. CXXXV), there seem to be at least five different types of arrangement of Carmina minora found in various manuscripts and groups of manuscripts. None of them can be considered authentic, but not for the reasons given by Birt (pp. LXXXVI f.; CXXXIV ff.). He seems to think that poems of considerable length — such as the Epithalamium for Palladius (C.min. 25, 145 lines long), the Laus Serenae (C.min. 30, 236 lines, perhaps planned to be even longer), the torso of a Gigantomachia (C.min. 53, 128 lines) — could not have been placed next to epigrams of eight and ten lines. Birt claims that Latin poets tended to place poems of similar length next to each other; he compares the Priapea, on the one hand, Statius’ Silvae, on the other (p. LXXVI). But there is no rule which can be applied to all poets: analogies are not always helpful. One might compare the Corpus bucolicorum, i.e., a collection of bucolic and non-bucolic poems by Theocritus and other poets. Some manuscripts include more poems than others, and the order of poems varies. Many seem to have the character of anthologies, but we know (from Artemidorus, Anth. Pal. 9,205) that in the late Hellenistic period an effort was made to collect all the bucolic texts. The desire for completeness may have led ancient editors to include more and more poems that were not bucolic, and not by Theocritus.

Catullus’ liber is not a good analogy either. It includes relatively short poems at the beginning and end, and a number of long ones in the middle. Birt (p. LXXVI) is forced by his theory to assume that Catullus’ book was shortened and rearranged by an editor (Neque Catullus suam syllogen talem qualem habemus promulgavit, sed inferior aetas et decurtavit et ordinavit). But Wendell Clausen 19 has shown convincingly, I think, that what we have is not one liber but three libelli, and that an “editor, more concerned to preserve than to present,” (p. 40) placed some unfinished or otherwise unsatisfactory poems at the end of the first libellus (cc. 1–60). Not much is to be gained from the textual tradition of Ausonius. Birt believes (p. CXXXVI and n. 2) that the order found in the Vossianus Latinus 111

18 The scribes of the cod. Palatinus of the Greek Anthology seem to have followed the same procedure, especially in Book Seven.

19 Classical Philology 71 (1976), 37–43.
(9th cent.) is due to an editor, not the poet himself. But the possibility of a double recensio in Ausonius remains. Finally, the codex Salmesianus (Birt, loc. cit.), probably compiled in the 6th century, is an anthology. Even though some of the Claudian manuscripts, as we have seen, are anthologies, the tradition as a whole reflects the wish of many readers to have a complete edition, including everything the great poet wrote, even fragments, improvisations, and pieces whose authenticity was not above dispute.

We have seen that the problem of order and arrangement in Claudian’s Carmina minora is closely connected with the textual tradition of the poet’s works. The fact that certain poems are missing in some of the main manuscripts has led modern editors to relegate them into an appendix. Under such circumstances no manuscript can be a reliable guide. None of the different arrangements seems to reveal a principle, even though related poems are sometimes grouped together. Incidentally, there seems to be some evidence that none of our editions of Claudian is complete: a fragment quoted by a grammarian (G.L. Keil, 5,589,3), rus istud pretio constat vili, cannot be found in any of the extant poems. The grammarian, however, may have made a mistake: he also quotes four short passages from Ausonius which do not occur anywhere in the direct tradition.

But there is another argument overlooked so far. We have seen how many poems among the Carmina minora and in the Appendix are unfinished, mere fragments or possibly first drafts: Nos. 2; 5; 6; 24 (?) ; 28 (?) ; 30 (?) ; 43 (?) ; 52; 53; App., Nos. 2; 9; 13; 20; 21. There is a difference between these pieces and the finished poems (short or long) which appear in both collections, but no attempt was made in ancient times to sort them out. Some unfinished poems appear in the series C.min. 1–25, which, as Birt claims, occurs in all the main witnesses, and must therefore be, in his opinion, the order of the archetype.

In conclusion, it is better to resign oneself than to indulge in fruitless speculation. Magna pars scientiae est quaedam nescire, as Grotius said. What we seem to have in Claudian’s Carmina minora are pieces of all kinds and sizes, genres and styles from the poet’s workshop, some finished, some fragmentary. One admires the versatility, craftsmanship, and fine literary style of the poet. Even a torso, left by a great artist, can be impressive. After his death, everything must have seemed important to an admiring public, and within a short time, I suspect, not one but several editions were made. The published material was soon rearranged and excerpted for different purposes, perhaps for use in schools, for anthologies, etc. The preserved manuscripts reflect many centuries of this editorial process, fluctuating between two extremes: a Gesamtausgabe, on the one side; an Anthology, on the other. Our conclusion may seem disappointing, but it helps us to understand what could have happened when a prolific author suddenly died. Many unfinished projects were found among his papers. What we have is valuable, I think, just because some of it represents "work in progress" at various stages.

Addendum

When I wrote this article, during a sabbatical leave of absence, I had no access to Alan Cameron's book on Claudian (Oxford U.P., 1970), nor had I read Christian Gnilka's review in Gnomon 49 (1977), 34–51. I am glad to see now that Cameron's views concerning the publication of the Carmina minora are consistent with my own. Cameron is convinced that the Carmina minora were published soon after the poet's death, at the order of Stilicho (pp. 416 ff.). Following Platnauer (Loeb edition, vol. I, 1928, p. xviii, n. 2) he believes that some pieces are mere jottings from Claudian's notebooks, fragments to be worked into a longer poem some day; he sums up: "Brief epigrams, epithalamia, half-finished epics and panegyrics all jumbled together in no apparent order, with a number of hexameter poems of 50–100 lines." (p. 418).

There are many valuable comments on the Carmina minora in Cameron's book: compare especially pp. 406 ff. on Nos. 30 and 31. He must be right when he says that No. 52 was unfinished at Claudian's death. In his opinion, Nos. 4, 9 and 10 of the Appendix are probably genuine (pp. 203; 407 f.). I think he has misunderstood No. 18 of the Carmina minora (pp. 391 f., "it describes with some admiration and astonishment how the farmers of Gaul control their oxen"). Gnilka's comments on Nos. 23 (Studien zur Literatur der Spätantike, Bonn, 1975, pp. 70 ff.) and 32 (Gnomon, loc. cit., pp. 50 f.) deserve to be read carefully.

I am very grateful to Miroslav Marcovich for editorial suggestions.

The Johns Hopkins University
Interpreting Second Declension Singular Forms in -u

PAUL A. GAENG

With the fall of final -m in spoken, i.e., so-called Vulgar Latin, and the merger of /ð/ and /ð/ in the unstressed final syllable, the accusative is said to have been assimilated to the ablative, thus giving rise to what was to become, in the second declension singular, the general oblique case in -o.¹ Thus, an originally phonological phenomenon eventually turned into a morphological one.² However, the orthographic change from -u to -o in the final syllable, reflecting the emergence of this new case form (a change that is clearly reflected in studies of Late Latin documents like those of Pei, Sas, B. Löfstedt, Politzer, Cooper, Jennings, my own on Christian Inscriptions, and, more recently, Charles Carlton’s study on documents from Ravenna)³ is far from characteristic of the earlier Vulgar Latin period (say, up to the fourth–fifth centuries). Indeed, the phenomenon is extremely rare in Diehl’s seminal study on final -m in epigraphic material,⁴ where instances of an -u ending in what appears to be the classical accusative case abound, e.g., deus magnu oclu habet, filias titulu posuerunt, Petrus cum suis votu solvet, vixit annu et dies L, post ovitu meu, and passim.

⁴ Ernst Diehl, De m. finali epigraphica (Leipzig, 1899), 268 ff.

It must be pointed out, however, that the apparent omission of final -m in the classical accusative, even on inscriptions of a later date, such as Christian inscriptions of the fifth and sixth centuries, is far from overwhelming, let alone universal. While there are many examples of the omission of this final consonant in the accusative, in both dated and undated inscriptions, there are also a great number of correct occurrences. To illustrate this phenomenon and to get some idea of a possible ratio of omission versus retention of final -m, I have selected a sampling taken from Chapter XXVI of Diehl's collection of Inscriptiones Latinae Christianae Veteres (ILCV) (Vol. II, 279 ff.), which includes 55 epitaphs from the area of Rome concerned with the purchase of burial places and sarcophagi for two or more persons, so-called loci bisomi, trisomi, and even quadrisomi. Out of a total of 74 occurrences of the direct object—the usual formula being emit or fecit (fecerunt) sibi locum bisomum (trisomum, quadrisomum), or simply locum or bisomum, etc.—I found 36 occurrences spelled with -u and 38 with -um. On six inscriptions, furthermore, I noted the concurrent use of classical accusatives in -um and forms in -u in the same function, as in emit sibi et Maxentiae locum bisomum (3810A). It is also interesting to observe that in five out of seven cases where the expected accusative appears with an -u ending, the ablative preceded by the preposition a(b) is also spelled with -u, as in locu bisomu emptu ab Ursu fossore (3811A, a. 403). (This group of inscriptions, incidentally, seems to come from the first half of the fifth century, seeing that some of them are precisely dated.)

A sampling such as this nevertheless seems to suggest a considerable hesitation between forms in -um and -u to signal direct object function, even in formulaic expressions involving high frequency words, in which the retention of final -m as a written device may not reflect the true state of the spoken language at all. In fact, such a hesitation on the written level must surely reflect new spoken language habits. Without wishing to embark upon a discussion of the chronology of the loss of final -m in Latin speech—scholars do not seem to be in agreement on this point anyway—

---

6 The number in brackets refers to the reference number in Diehl's collection, from which these and all subsequent examples are taken.

7 Cf. in this connection Emil Seelmann, Die Aussprache des Lateins nach physiologisch-historischen Grundsätzen (Heilbronn, 1885), wherein the author states: "Die Vulgärsprrache hat . . . jedwedes M dem Schwunde preisgegeben" (p. 357 f.).

I hope to show in my subsequent line of argument that written -m at this point in time (late fourth–early fifth centuries) no longer reflects a spoken /m/ accusative marker, but merely represents an orthographic tradition which some stonemasons continue to observe, in accordance with their training in Latin grammar.

But what about a form like annu in such expressions as qui vixit annu et meses IIII (3299)? Could this form, which we might assume to be an accusative without final -m, not also stand for a classical ablative? Singular ablative forms spelled with -u for the expected -o are attested in inscriptions from all over the Roman Empire. And although the form annu has generally been interpreted as an equivalent of annum whenever it is followed in these time expressions by the accusative plural forms menses and dies, the interchangeability and practical identity of accusative and ablative in expressions of time duration—as further evidenced by the frequently concurrent use of both cases in the same inscription—would lend support to the ablative interpretation of annu also. After all, vixit anno (also found on inscriptions) is perfectly acceptable to Latin grammarians, even though vixit annum is the more usual formula in expressions indicating length of time a deceased person had lived. Thus, we are really left in the dark as to whether annu is to be interpreted as a classical accusative without final -m or an ablative in -u for the expected -o.

The difficulty of deciding whether forms in -u represent accusatives or 9 Otto Prinz, De O et U vocalibus inter se mutatis in lingua latina (Halle, 1932), 122.

10 On the interchangeability of accusative and ablative “ad spatium temporis desig- nandum,” cf. Guilelmus Konjetzny, “De idiomatis syntacticis in titulis latinis urbanis conspicuis,” Archiv für lateinische Lexikographie und Grammatik, 15 (1908), 297–351. Cf. also Jules Pirson, La langue des inscriptions latines de la Gaule (Brussels, 1901), where he states: “Dans les inscriptions de la Gaule, à quelque époque qu’elles appartiennent, l’ablatif a été complètement assimilé à l’accusatif pour exprimer la durée” (p. 183). In a similar vein, and with specific reference to inscriptions from Spain, Henry Martin makes the statement that “it is not at all rare to find the Accusative and Ablative side by side in the same expression of time, thus confirming their practical identity to express duration of time.” Notes on the Syntax of the Latin Inscriptions Found in Spain (Baltimore, 1909), 23.
12 Albert Carnoy suggested in his Le latin d’Espagne d’après les inscriptions (Louvain, 1906) that these apparent ablative in -u may be due to hypercorrections of a semi-literate stonemason who is vaguely conscious of the difference in the ablative endings of second and fourth declension nouns but no longer remembers which noun belongs to which class. Cf. also the studies by Pirson (op. cit., 20) and B. Löfstedt (op. cit., 116) for similar views. Since, however, more often than not fourth declension ablative are spelled with -o rather than -u, as in the frequent occurrence of spirito for spiritus (cf. Diehl, ILCV, Vol. III, p. 409), one wonders whether fourth declension ablative in -u were either frequent enough or exerted enough of a pressure on second declension ablative to create such a confusion in the stonemason’s mind.
ablatives is further compounded by the fact that in some instances, as in contra votu et dolo suo (4181, a. 400) (for the expected dolum suum), forms in -u and -o occur concurrently in the same syntactic function. Are such cases to be taken as prima facie evidence that the form in -u reflects an accusative? This is, in essence, what Prinz\(^{13}\) suggests when he claims that the frequent forms spelled with -u occurring side by side with classical ablatives in -o are to be interpreted as final m-less accusative forms. On the strength of forms like tertius idus, se vivu, vixit annu, and many others, the German scholar sets out to show that in inscriptions from Gaul and Italy the -u spelling reflects a classical accusative case, the final -m having been omitted by the stonecutter for reasons of contraction, haplography (when the word begins with m-), and lack of space (marginae urgentiae), while in the Iberian Peninsula and in Africa the -u seems to stand for the classical ablative. His line of reasoning runs something like this: whenever the -o spelling occurs in the ablative almost to the exclusion of forms in -u and -um (the latter being an inverse spelling, also attested here and there, particularly after prepositions, as in fecit cum maritum annos III [4219B, a. 392]), the occasional orthographic -u is to be interpreted as representing the ablative case. Conversely, where frequent -u and -um spellings occur in an ablative function beside the normal ablative form in -o (particularly when found in the same inscription side by side), the orthographic -u would rather reflect a classical accusative form with the final -m omitted, i.e., a syntactic confusion. It is perfectly true that in many instances forms in -u and -o (and also forms in -um) occur on one and the same inscription in what appears to be the ablative case; by the same token, there are just as many instances, and in some cases even more (e.g., in Rome), where the ablative is represented by a form in -u exclusively. The fact that Prinz himself seems to throw up his hands in desperation when he admits “difficilimum est iudicare, utrum in U terminacione accusativus an ablativeus subit”\(^{14}\) would suggest that there is hardly any point in trying to decide when the -u spelling stands for final Lat. /5/ in the classical ablative, and when for a final m-less accusative form. Under the circumstances, Bengt Løfstedt is quite right when he states, in connection with later inscriptions (and surely he must have Christian inscriptions in mind), that it is in principle wrong to try to decide in every instance which form in -u stands for an accusative, and which one for an ablative; the stonemasons often did not know it themselves.\(^{15}\)

The problem of the -u spelling for an expected accusative in -um or an ablative in -o must be considered in the light of an overall comparison of \(^{13}\) Op. cit., 121 ff.

\(^{14}\) Ibid., 130.
these two cases, that is, an analysis of the way accusative and ablative are orthographically represented in our documentary material. Thus, in addition to the replacement of the expected accusative in -um by a form in -u (i.e., the apparent omission of final -m), this case also appears spelled with -o, as in the already mentioned phrase contra dolo suo. Similar examples occur in deo temens (1340, a. 486), pater titulo posuit (3584D, AD), tumulavit marito (362), and passim. This spelling occurs both in direct object function and after prepositions that traditionally take the accusative case, and the phenomenon is by no means limited to a particular area. The earliest example of a direct object in -o is found on a Roman epitaph, which is believed to have been composed no later than the early third century: ne quis titulo molestet (3972). It is significant, I believe, that forms in -o for the expected -um also occur in highly formulaic expressions, such as titulo posuit for titulum, which a stonemason would be least likely to misspell. Also, both the classical accusative in -um and its substitute form in -o occasionally appear on the same epitaph, as in contra votum suo (756) or gesisti sacrum officio (1075, a. 630), suggesting a purely formal rather than grammatical opposition between the accusative in -um and the ablative in -o.

Although the ablative is generally speaking signalled by the -o ending in our inscriptions, a occasional replacement by -u and even -um is attested here and there, again without any particular restriction as to region. (Baetica and Lusitania, however, seem to show greater orthographic conservatism than any other regions of Western Romania.) The replacement of the -o by what would appear to be a morpho-syntactic substitution of the classical accusative for the ablative occurs particularly after prepositions, as in de donum dei (121), in hoc tumulum (3550, a. 511), positi sunt in cimiterium (2000, 7th cent.), cum virginium suum (1263a), and passim. This latter example is of some interest. The inscription on which it is found commemorates a deceased wife. On the same stone we also find another epitaph (1263b) which is dedicated to the woman’s deceased daughter. Each epitaph appears to have been written by the respective husband; one of them writes: vixit cum virginium suum, while the other uses the correct ablative cum virginiuo suo. Does it seem likely that the hypercorrect form in -um should have sounded any different from that in -o? Sittl16 claimed, more than half a century ago, that the form oblatum on an inscription from Neretum (Calabria) (CIL IX 10) dated A.D. 341 was pronounced /oblato/. I am most inclined to agree with him.

Within the framework of such an analysis of these two cases—an analysis for which I used about 5,000 inscriptions, from all areas of the Western Roman Empire, to the exclusion of Africa and the eastern territories, for which a comparable study still remains to be done—and in view of the likely collapse of their opposition on the level of content, it is indeed futile to attempt to determine whether orthographic -u represents a classical accusative form with final -m omitted, or an ablative. With the fall of final -m, forms like titulu (acc.) and titulo (abl.) fell together in pronunciation as /titulo/, bringing about a collapse of accusative/ablative distinction, although, in terms of flexional elements, still being observed in traditional orthography, in accordance with the writer's level of instruction. It may well be, as Hugo Schuchardt\(^{17}\) once suggested, that the final spoken /o/, represented in writing now by -u (or -um) now by -o, at first sounded like an [u]-colored [o] or an [o]-colored [u]—a "Mittellaut," to use his term; most Western Romance languages in which the final vowel survived have eventually developed an /o/, except for those dialects in which a stronger [u] coloring finally resulted in /u/, as in the general area south of Rome.\(^{18}\) Thus, we see emerging a single oblique case form on the level of content in which semantic relationship is no longer bound to morphological distinction, the same form—innovative -o and residual -u (-um)—serving to express both classical accusative and ablative functions.

In this context, then, it seems reasonable to conclude that forms in -u are neither accusatives nor ablatives, but rather represent a "transitional" spelling in the overall process of restructuring the system of casus obliqui in the singular, as a result of eliminating the formal category of the accusative in -um from the language.

University of Illinois at Urbana

\(^{17}\) Der Vokalismus des Vulgärlateins (Paris, 1866–1888), II, 94 f.

\(^{18}\) Schuchardt, loc. cit.
Aspects of Roman Poetic Technique in a Carolingian Latin Satiric Text

CHARLES WITKE

E. R. Curtius has averred that “it was through Charlemagne that the historical entity which I call ‘the Latin Middle Ages’ was first fully constituted. . . . I use the term to designate the share of Rome, of the Roman idea of the state, of the Roman church and of Roman culture, in the physiognomy of the Middle Ages in general—a far more inclusive phenomenon, then, than the mere survival of the Latin language and literature.”

Hence significant aspects of Carolingian Latin literature must be studied not merely in relationship to influence from classical Latin works, or in terms of imitation. Yet the very term “Carolingian Latin satiric text” implies, first, the existence of a literary genre in Latin called satura, and second, a continuity of that genre to at least the age of Charlemagne. The term implies, in addition to such generic incitements to write and to comprehend satire, an awareness of the form qua form or genre. To use the formal possibilities of a literary form one must be aware of the form first; “Carolingian Latin satire” implies such an awareness.

Even in antiquity the satura was an elastic literary genre, accompanied by problems of definition for audience and poet alike. Elsewhere I have suggested that the Carolingian age was aware of the satiric tradition of 1 E. R. Curtius, European Literature and the Latin Middle Ages, tr. W. Trask (New York, 1953), 27. One should also bear in mind that Charlemagne’s people paid a high price for his imposing on the Franks and other peoples a language, beliefs and institutions that were basically incompatible with their own culture. For an assessment of the literary and linguistic implications of the classicism of Charlemagne’s hegemony, see E. Auerbach, Literary Language and its Public in Late Latin Antiquity and in the Middle Ages, tr. R. Manheim (New York, 1965), 119 ff.

Horace, Persius and Juvenal. Further, the writer of the text under review, Theodulph of Orléans, had a good model for writing mordant invective in elegiac distichs, in the denunciation of Calvitor by an anonymous poet in the Latin Anthology, 902 Riese. Although it takes more to make a satire than such invective, I hope to demonstrate here that the verses in question are properly regarded as satire as well as satiric, even though they are an address on the theme quo indisceius nemo, and have no named recipient (though the addressee is very probably a specific person).

To turn briefly to the other term in this essay's title, "Roman poetic technique" means Roman norm, not Roman influence, though this latter subject could easily be analysed along historical lines. "Influence" has often been used, especially since the nineteenth century, to signify the transfer and rearrangement of literary forms and themes from one work to another. There are drawbacks to such a narrow definition of influence, especially in light of neoformalist, or structuralist, approaches to literature, according to which a form cannot be de-formed and still persist or subsist as the same form. Theme is best taken as pre-poetic outline, like a topos. The theme per se cannot be transferred from one work of literature to another.4

The metamorphic implications of "influence" (from fluere onward) imply that influence is an objective, tangible and measurable connection. Further, this view of influence equates it to textual parallelism or textual similarity. Actually, according to modern criticism, influence pertains only to the writer's internal intellectual or psychic experience, the world of his experience in reading and otherwise exposing himself to literature, whilst textual parallelism pertains to the world of literature itself. I propose to avoid influence and textual parallelism in favor of "norm."5

Many students of the continuing development of Latin literature in the post-Augustan world tend to emphasize too heavily one end of the spectrum of creativity in literature, just as the student of the more rigorously classical tends to inhabit, instinctively perhaps, the other end. I refer to a continuum running from viewing the composition of literature as a pure process of transfer and reorganization of received materials, to another extreme, that of absolutely ex novo creation. The one is based too closely on biological analogy, rampant in the nineteenth century, when theories

---

3 For further details on Theodulph's awareness of Latin satire as a genre, see Ch. Witke, Latin Satire (Leiden, 1970), 168 ff.
4 For the working definition of influence in this and the following paragraphs, see C. Guellen, Literature as System (Princeton, 1971), 17 ff.
of influence and means for assessing influence were codified, especially in the theory and practice of classical philology; the other is based illegitimately on a religious analogy.\(^6\)

The mediaevalist runs a hazard of thinking of early mediaeval Latin texts especially in terms of how they deviate from classical practice; he runs the risk of unconsciously measuring negative influence. What is reputed to be valuable and interesting in such texts is what has been transferred thither from classical literature and what has been reorganized out of a kit of classical parts, as it were. This view throttles a mature and insightful critical understanding of how and why mediaeval texts are mediaeval, and also subverts the idea of a norm, a canon of expectations on the part of the audience and an environment of formal possibilities\(^7\) on the part of the poet or writer.

My task is to show how a Carolingian Latin text, written before 780 by Theodulph of Orléans, who died around 821, and printed in the Monumenta Germaniae Historica, Poetae Latini Aevi Carolini, I (ed. E. Duemmler, Berlin, 1881), pp. 464 f., is a special kind of Latin satire. I should like to demonstrate how this text is written out of different formal possibilities than those informing a classical text; that it is nevertheless a satire; and that the Roman norm of poetic composition, of composing satire specifically, can be easily discerned behind stylistic, syntactic and grammatical elements which are definitely post-classical, that is, Carolingian in this text.

Illum non sal, non istum sapientia condit,
   hunc doctrina nequit vincere, sal nec cum.
doctrinam cuius vanum est adhibere medullis, quoque magis doceas, stultior inde fiet.
sic crudum studeat laterem dum quisque lavare, quo magis eluerit, plus facit inde luti.
   quid bona verba iuvant, ubi nil habet alma voluntas, aut quid in urtices semina iacta iuvet?
   flava quid horrendis prosunt data mella lacunis, quid litor aut olei stercore mixtus aget?
quid iuvat aurito lyra si persultet asello, cornigero aut lituus si strepat arte bovi?
   sole oriente viget quantum tua visio, caece, tantum eius sensus post bona verba solet.
carmina plura queunt, nequeunt tamen omnia, quamvis littera gentilis, hoc quoque sancta canit.

\(^6\) On originality and influence, see also R. Wellek and A. Warren, Theory of Literature\(^3\) (New York, 1956), 257 ff.

\(^7\) Cf. K. Vietor, Geist und Form (Bern, 1952), 300.
dicitur et Circe socios insignis Ulyssis mutasse in varias carminis arte feras.
plurima cum possint, scabiem sanare nequibunt, tinea nec horum murmure sana fiet.

ut tamen illa nihil cui manserit hernia prosunt, cumque fiunt, totum perditur illud opus:
sic deperdet opus tibi qui, simulator inique, quiddam nisus erit insinuare boni.
denique rex sapiens cum plurima dixerit istinc, hoc unum exempli ponere sorte libet.
si contusus erit pilae in vertigine stultus ut far, segnities non sua linquet eum.
verba ducis posui, ponam quid rustica plebes re bene de tali dicere saepe solet:
non facere hoc usu, non verbere quibis, ut unquam bubo sit accipiter, qui petat ungue grues, utque tuum officium, cape, vultur possit habere, est quia tardus, edax, inque vehendo gravis.
discere nulla cupit bona, sed mala discere cuncta, vis cur hoc faciat discere? stultus inest.
hic Iuda peior, melior te, Petre, videri vult, mala multa tegit sors simulante peplō.
hic bona parva putat magna, et mala plurima nulla:
se, cum vult alios fallere, fallit inops.

The text before us is Latin. The langue of which this is a parole is a system, not merely the sum of all extant Latin words, phrases or indeed sentences.8
Rather it is a system which can generate new phrases and sentences by means of its grammar, and hence can generate new poems by means of the grammar of literature. The parole itself, namely this text beginning with illum and ending with inops, is likewise a system of signifiers and of signifieds. Classical Latin satire is not coterminous with all extant works of Horace, Persius and Juvenal. It too is a system, a network of formal opportunities or possibilities, of incitations to commit or to understand satura.9 This text’s signifiers and significations, locked into arbitrary and conventional relationships first on the merely semantic level (the poem is in Latin, not Greek or Japanese), reflect this arbitrary associativeness on

8 The terms are borrowed, of course, from F. de Saussure, Cours de linguistique générale3 (Paris, 1967), passim. See also J. Culler, Structuralist Poetics (Ithaca, 1975), 8 ff. My adaptation of certain structuralist frames of reference for situating the problems of Theodulph’s text implies nothing about the efficacy of structuralism (or of post-structuralism) as a means of critically approaching classical or mediaeval works of literature.
9 Cf. C. A. van Rooy, Studies in Classical Satire and Related Literary Theory (Leiden, 1965), 30 ff.
another level: the text is not an epic fragment or a romance, but a satire.

How is this known? The first two lines provide an answer. The ego, the "I" speaking the poem, the first-person singular of the verb system, is asserting the inoperability of intellectual activity on illum. Even though no first-person singular verb appears until line 29, we must understand that the speaker is speaking in propria persona, and that the whole poem is a pronouncement, a speech act, in the first person singular. In poems in Latin where the speaker goes on at some length to characterize in negative terms the shortcomings of another, speaking from a judgmental perspective that is rarely tested and sometimes cleverly concealed, we have either a comic excerpt or satura, including satiric invective. The former possibility can be ruled out by the absence from this text of other arbitrary systems of the comic, viz., dialogue between characters, reversal of expectations, surprise, and other familiar elements. It can also be demonstrated on an a priori basis that Carolingian Latin court poetry did not develop extra-classical genres, and that this poem is not a modern forgery.

If, as I believe, this parole or speech act is in the langue of satire, what do its signifiers and significations do that is different from other examples of an earlier, or classical, stage of the development of this langue? What systems does the relationship between signifier and signified constitute—systems that are like other ones, yet unlike? Another way of asking this question is, how does the writer make this writing something that his audience and he himself can decode without being an antiquarian or indulging in pre-artistic archaeology? Alternatively, how does the writer make a speaking voice, the first-person singular, which is intelligible not only on the level of Latin (e.g., these are well-formed grammatical sentences) but simultaneously on the level of code or the generic level? Further, how does the "I," first-person singular, show that he has naturalized both langue and parole, and is not fashioning or re-fashioning an antique artifact? In a word, what is traditional and what is Carolingian?

I shall invert the order of this query and deal first, and primarily, with what is Carolingian; because one may assume that readers are already familiar with the larger hallmarks of the classical exercise of satire, such as direct address of the reader, as we see in line 36 of Theodulph's text; abrupt beginnings, as in line 1; the proverb, as in lines 5 ff., and again in 27 f.; and the whole practical everyday tone of the piece, with its exempla drawn equally from life and from literature; and also the discrepancy between outer appearance and inner reality of moral status, as in lines 37 f.11 Whilst these formal features assist in identifying this poem as satire, they do not alone constitute what I would call the Roman norm.

10 "Writing" here subsumes a view of the post-structuralist J. Derrida, Of Grammatology, tr. G. C. Spivak (Baltimore, 1976), 6 ff. However, I do not intend my term "writing" to be only so narrowly construed.

What is Carolingian in this text could be divided into what is non-Roman as well as what is reworking or reshaping of what is Roman. However, there would be no advantage in pursuing such a dichotomy, which might induce our methodology merely to discover what is Latin, and to call this simple heuristic exercise by a grandiose name, perhaps “structuralist approach.” I prefer to isolate what is Carolingian the way one would isolate the idiolects of any given text, without bias concerning good, i.e., classical practice, and bad, i.e., mediaeval distortion, to mention cryptic prejudices all too often met with in classical scholarship that extends itself to post-classical concerns.

First of all, we may note that each couplet is end-stopped, that is, it finishes a sentence; this situation is rarely met with in twenty continuous couplets of Roman elegy, and ostensibly is an aesthetic blemish. Such repetition violates a sense of expectation for variatio. Second, the poem seems to have no coherent thematic structure. That is, its poetic texture seems to be meagerly derived not from metaphor or even metonymy but principally from the regular recurring units of the meter, which some would say recurs all too regularly indeed, as well as ending monotonously in sentences coinciding with the end of each couplet.

Another post-classical feature in this text is the use of the pronouns illum, istum, hunc, and eum at the opening; if by these pronouns only one person is signified their use is illogical and improper. However, one might see in this series of pronouns a sort of priamel wherein various evidences of stupidity are catalogued. Then the text goes on to concentrate on the kind of stultus who merely becomes stultior the more he is instructed. This obliging the reader or audience to sort out en route these two possibilities is obviously a feature of post-antique rather than of classical poetry. Texts from the classical period rarely are ambiguous in this non-creative way, and some would say that the text before us is therefore of a low grade for reasons apart from the quality of Latinity displayed. To this one can only observe that mediaeval art is not classical art. Some would see in the attack on a variety of stulti that veers off into a series of illustrations on the observation that innately depraved character cannot be changed for the good by teaching or discipline, and that culminates in an identification of 11 Witke, op. cit. (supra, n. 3), passim and 271 ff. For a view that Latin satire did not continue beyond Juvenal, see M. Coffey, Roman Satire (London–New York, 1976; I have not had access to this book).

the stultus with one who is morally defective, not so much disjointed thinking as evidence of the Christian axiom that the interior life is a continuum, and that failing to heed instruction puts one in the camp of scoundrels, hypocrites and Judas himself. What would in classical poetry have been a human type is in this mediaeval text confined to an unnamed individual whom the poet detests. But he detests him for his evil, which brings us to the somewhat more general conclusion about moral evil, lines 37 ff. This view is consonant with Carolingian concerns to upgrade the quality of moral life and to do it by didactic means: a basic premise of Christianity itself as well.

Further, this text is Carolingian in that there is a relative absence of reiterative patterns, such as those formed in classical poetry by tense, person, grammar itself in other ways; by theme, image or lexical choice.\(^\text{12}\) Meter and the voice of the narrator alone unify and poeticize this text, it would appear. However, the relatively low frequency of such features should not lead us to conclude that the text is not poetically functional or that it is merely phatic. Two basic modes of arrangement are used in behavior that is verbal: selection and combination. Selection of words in a speech chain is based on equivalence, similarity and dissimilarity, synonymity and antonymity; the combination of words, the syntactical build-up or sequence, is based on contiguity. If the poetic function of language projects from the axis of such selection along the lines of contiguity into the axis of combination, as in Roman Jakobson’s famous aphorism, then equivalence is made to become the organizing principle, the constructive device of poetry.\(^\text{13}\)

It is because such a principle of equivalence can be demonstrated in the poem of Theodulph under review that it is undeniably poetic. Further, the principle of equivalence is projected into the axis of selection in a special way. The equivalents themselves, the syllables as units of measure (all shorts are equally short, all longs equally long), the reiterative figures of sense and hence of sound in this text, are Roman, or more precisely, are selected in accord with a Roman norm. This norm is, grossly, the elegiac meter. More finely, it can be seen in respect for word-boundaries at the diacresis, in chiastic arrangements such as illum non sal / sal nec eum, lines 1 and 2, i.e., pronoun-negative conjunction-noun, where noun equivalence is also semantic and lexical identity. Examples may also be found in the alteration of finite verb indicative present active / finite verb subjunctive present active in lines 7 and 8, and again in lines 9 and 10, 11 and 12, framed by an inversion of this pattern in lines 5 and 6, studeat/facit and a variation, indicative / indicative in lines 13 and 14. Such patternings can be found in many continuous passages of Vergil or Ovid, and are akin to the organizing principles one comes upon in Merovingian Latin poetry, such as organization of strophes by means of the physical senses of sight, smell, etc., in Fortunatus' Vexilla regis.14

---

But if the empirical linguistic data are constituted on a Roman basis, out of the resources of the Latin poetical language, and selected in accord with the, or a, Roman norm, the referential function of the text and its cumulative aesthetic impact are not Roman but mediaeval: specifically, early mediaeval style associated with the court of Charlemagne, its widespread veneration of the Augustan poets, and its wholesale, even uncrITICAL, adoption of their poetic techniques, to use them to compose unroman, unaugustan poetic texts.15 The tension between the Roman norm and the mediaeval reference and aesthetic can be seen to a greater extent in other forms, particularly panegyric and epic, and need not detain us here.

Once agreement is reached that this text is poetic use of language, we must press on with another question: are its poetical qualities mere versification along Roman canonical lines, normative in that sense, following techniques dead and gone with the rest of Romanitas? Has Roman metaphor left behind only the empty shell of mediaeval metonymy? Does the absence of metaphor, that poetic trope par excellence, leave us with a prosaic variety of metrical art?16 Mediaeval Latin literary theory shares with Old Indic a clear dichotomization of two poles of verbal art, ornatus difficilis and ornatus facilis. The latter is much harder to analyse, both linguistically and from a literary critical point of view, since the language has few verbal devices and is close to everyday referential language. Yet I submit that the prolonged grammatical trope noticed above in reference to the verbs in lines 5 through 14 would alone lift this text from the realm of metrical prose. Further figures and tropes concealed in the morphological and syntactical choices of these lines can readily be found by the attentive reader. The poet has exploited the poetic resources adhering in both the langue, Latin, and the parole, the genre of satire. A dearth of lexical tropes

---

14 This poem will be discussed in a forthcoming paper.
15 See Auerbach, op. cit. (supra, n. 1), 117 ff.
16 Culler, op. cit. (supra, n. 8), 179 ff.; for the subsequent statement on ornatus, see Jakobson, loc. cit. (supra, n. 13).
beyond the proverbs in lines 5–6 and 27–28 should not dull our response to the poetic texture of this metonymical composition.

Latin satire is not a genre relying heavily on the arsenal of poetic techniques familiar in, say, Roman lyric or mediaeval hymn. Absence of much poetic density in a satiric piece of writing or in formal satire should not cause alarm or provoke opinions about mediaeval incompetency to compose satire. Classical satire’s meter is not elegy, but hexameter. Theodolph, however, is using the didactic meter for his age. His elegiacs are functionally the hexameters of the Augustans. Here again Ovid’s example in the Ars Amatoria can be adduced. But further, generic deviance can easily be seen in this case as one of those literary mutations which uphold a conservative tradition whilst seemingly slighting it. Genre and metre are inextricably twined together in both the classical and the mediaeval practice of Latin poetry. Yet even in the classical age, experimentation was carried forth, as can be seen from a close examination of Ovid, whose elegiacs (apart from the Ars Amatoria) yielded motifs and poetic principles of organization also to his epic Metamorphoses.

Let us now examine Theodolph’s text for more local effects. What sets it off from the Roman practice of the genre of satire? Intense observation yields relatively little, apart from too great regularity of diaeresis, absense of caesura, certain traps of syntax (in lines 39 f., for instance), that would presumably have not been imposed on a Roman audience for such a poem; and, of course, relatively minor cultural shifts, such as littera sancta, line 16, rex sapiens, i.e., Solomon, line 25; Judas and Peter, line 37. Apart from these, the ingenium of the poem’s parole is Roman, just as the ethos or grammaticalcy of the langue is Latin.

What, then, gives it a Carolingian aesthetic, as I have several times asserted it has? It would seem to subsist in the rate of selection of elements of equivalency, and the lack of variety with which they are projected into combination. See, for instance, discere/discere/discere, lines 35 f.; nulla/cuncta, line 35; peior/melior, line 37; fallere/fallit, and se/alius, line 40, to confine observation solely to those visible on the level of lexical choice, from the poem’s locale where parallelisms dramatically increase toward the closure of the poem. A more Roman norm for such combinations can also be seen in this text, such as the bracketing of such topical units as lines 4 and 20, fiet/fiet; or 15 and 25, plura/plurima, with plurima also in line 19, in the middle as it were; see also lines 15 and 19, nequeunt/nequibunt, on a smaller scale of separation. But even here, such dense lexical repetition is unroman, or worse, a feature of bad Roman poetry, such as the repetition of morphological units in a touchstone of bad Roman verse, Cicero’s “o fortunatam natam me console Romam!”
None can deny that the principles of selection and of combination on the linguistic, lexical, semantic and generic levels are principles of Roman poetic composition, specifically of satire, that is, are elements of the Roman norm. The out-of-scale usage, dense frequency and lack of inflectional variation of the choices, however, are Carolingian. Poetic texture is achieved through repetition and density; the scale of the reactive units or locales of the text is relatively small, although larger units (such as lines 4 and 20, as mentioned above) do occur, and seem to offer our best evidence of the Roman norm.

Roman too is the reliance on exempla drawn from vivid scenes of everyday life, such as the man who in vain washes a brick,17 or the proverb from the Old Testament, Proverbs 27:22, in the Vulgate “si contuderis stultum in pila quasi ptisanas feriente desuper pilo, non auferetur ab eo stultitia eius” (5 f.; 27 f.). Further, the Roman norm is at work in selecting the wisdom of the rustica plebes, closer to nature and hence to timeless truths (lines 29 ff.), here exemplified in the comparison of rates of velocity of birds of prey, such as owl and hawk, vulture and falcon. The comparison is merely incidental to the inability to change the innate nature and capacities of the birds mentioned, and, by implication, the inability of art or training to alter any living being’s innate nature: a point not to be confused with the Christian doctrine of salvation for all who heed the teachings of the church. Theodulp h’s victim is being satirized (a classical literary activity), not relegated to damnation (a Christian pastoral function). It is precisely at this juncture of ancient poetic practice—viz. the genre of satire with its overdrawn denunciation, and Christian doctrine and convention of salvation for the transgressor—that the classical-Carolingian frontier is most uneasy. However, one may say that Christian institutions have been so thoroughly internalized (e.g., Judas and Peter, line 37) that they disappear behind the artistic fabric, the literary artifact, the text itself. Probably the original audience saw no discrepancy between asserting the impossibility of growth or development or alteration of habit, and the doctrine of accessibility for all to God’s grace, once the second idea had deeply sunk into the culture, and was perhaps as removed from daily Carolingian social and hortatory concerns as it is now.

The compartmentalization of the birds, their classification and incipient grouping as noble (hawk, falcon) and ignoble (vulture, owl) is also Carolingian, or at least in the spirit of an Isidore, who provides a useful if dubious etymology in this connection: “capus Italica lingua dicitur a 17 A. Otto, Die Sprichwörter der Römer (Leipzig, 1890), s.v. later, has seven citations, of course not including Theodulp.

Illinois Classical Studies, IV

capiendo. hunc nostri falconem vocant."\textsuperscript{18} The observation of the world of nature, to return later in Walahfrid Strabo, is here nevertheless Roman in spirit and akin to, say, Horace Satires 2.6. It is thoroughly Augustan.

One may also with confidence assert a Roman value expressed in the words "poetry can do many things, but not all," line 15. Some persons, the poet admits, can never be reached and taught; all the art and wisdom cannot dissuade the fool from his folly, the dissimulator from his deception. This insight proceeds more from an awareness of human nature than of theology or even practical pastoral experience. That same human nature was well studied in the Roman comedians, as well as in Ovid, who at Fasti 6.469 uses the locution auritis . . . asellis, should one seek for a classical parallel for the well-known and obvious zoological feature of the ass-ears in line 11 of Theodulph's text.\textsuperscript{19} Ovid likewise asked in Metamorphoses 7.167, "quid enim non carmina possint?", with carmina in the sense of spells. The more mundane or realistic Carolingian court poet limits himself to qualifying poetry's capacity to effect change. Even the exemplum from the Odyssey (17 f.), via Vergil, Eclogues 8.70, "carminibus Circe socios mutavit Ulixi," with carminibus again meaning spells, puts everyday and very mediaeval limits on what verbal art of any kind can do to or for a closed mind. The day for incantations was past.

We find in these borrowings from Ovid and from Vergil classical influence of a mechanical sort, mere transferred verbal signals, mentioned at the outset of this discussion. It would, however, be rash and narrow in outlook for the critic, on the basis of such textual parallels, to say that this poem is classically influenced. If we can see the Roman norm at work, shaping this poem, it is in the areas I have drawn attention to, and it is not limited to mere verbal parallelisms, interesting and important in their own right though they be. The Roman norm can be seen best in such features as the purely operational terms in which ille, the stupid man, is characterized up to lines 23 f., where the depiction turns assertive or descriptive.

What is post-Augustan, post-antique, is best characterized by the end-stopped lines, a doublet pattern signalled at the outset by sal repeated in two lines of parallel grammar and syntax recurring in narrow space (1 f.) and reinforced by variatio in lines 4 and 6. This locus and other similar ones in the poem suggest that a binary code pervades this text; an algorithm is demanded by such poetic parallelism as nulla/cuncta, line 35, \textsuperscript{18} Isidore, Etym. XII.7.57. Cf. Du Cange, s.v. capus; the bird might also be a hunting hawk.

\textsuperscript{19} The proverb õvos λópas in Latin has also a long career; see Otto, op. cit. (supra, n. 17), s.v. asinus. Cf. Boethius, Cons. Phil. 1.4.
peior/melior, line 37, and many other locations. Such parallelisms are not to be explained by adducing poverty of intellect or of poetic technique. The procedure of the two-line units both strengthens the dichotomy of binary opposition and draws attention to the problem of juxtaposition of king and peasant, noble and ignoble bird, sighted and blind, honey and dank caves, cleansing agent\(^2\) and filth, music and the brute animal world, strength and inefficiency, and all of the other contrasting, antonymic equivalencies with which this text abounds, and which form its principle of poetic organization. These juxtapositions, in turn, underlie the major confrontation of the text, its major contrast, that of sapiens or the I-narrator, and stultus. The line-formation in two-line units does not permit qualification, run over, shading, nuance or perspective: only confrontation.

Elsewhere I have tried to show that Theodulph of Orléans is different from a Roman satirist, in having in his Christian culture a calculus of values dichotomized along clear-cut, even binary lines.\(^2\) We are not far in the Middle Ages from those great static balancings in visual art of virtues and vices in dichotomized adversary relationships. There are four manuscripts of the ninth century that present such arrangements of the virtues and vices: Bern, Burgerbibl. Cod. 264; Leyden, Cod. Bur. Q3; Brussels, Bibl. Roy. ms 974; and Paris, B.N. lat. 8085. The first is probably from St. Gallen. All are considered of the second half of the ninth century. Theodulph is conceiving of his balancings along lines that may have had their origins in a fifth century archetype for Prudentius’ Psychomachia.\(^2\)

At any rate, the literary pairing is not Roman, but Carolingian.

It should come as no surprise to the careful student of post-classical Latin literature to see how a Latin satirist of the Carolingian court, though working from entirely different cultural premises, uses the Roman norm of satire to fashion a message of counsel and of insight into abiding human characteristics, though the message be unmistakably Carolingian in aesthetic impact.*

University of Michigan

\(^2\) See above, n. 3.

\(^2\) A. E. M. Katzenellenbogen, Allegories of the Virtues and Vices in Mediaeval Art from the Early Christian Times to the Thirteenth Century (London, Warburg Institute, 1939), passim. I am indebted to my colleague Professor Ifene Forsyth for aid in assessing the manuscript evidence.

* [Theodulph, 1 sal . . . 2 sal: Read 1 sal . . . 2 sol. For, 2 doctrina = sol \(\Leftrightarrow\) 13 f. bona verba = sol. Cf. Cicero De fin. 1.71 ea quae dixi sole ipso illustriora et clariora sunt.—Line 10 litor . . . olei: Unguent is applied to a clean, not to a dirty body.—Editor.]