This is the second in a projected series of six papers presenting conjectures in the text of Statius' Thebaid. The first of these papers appeared in ICS 14 (1989) 227–41; the rest will follow at intervals. As before, I take my lemmata from D. E. Hill's edition (Leiden 1983), and have regularly consulted the editions by Gevartius (1616 and 1618), Cruceus (1618), Veenhusen (1671), O. Müller (1870), Garrod (1906), Klotz (1908; revised by Klinnert, 1973) and Mozley (1928). There is a commentary on Book 3 by H. Snijder (Amsterdam 1968).

3. 6–12

Through the long night the evil tyrant Eteocles broods deeply on the tardiness of his cut-throats' return. Three reasons for the delay suggest themselves to him: his men lost their way; or they met with reinforcements from Argos; or (and here we come to the problem) something involving the neighbouring cities impeded them. As Mozley renders the Latin, an sceleris data fama per urbes / finitimas? paucosne, pater Gradiue, manue legimus indecores? . . . "

As Mozley renders the Latin, an sceleris data fama per urbes / finitimas? paucosne, pater Gradiue, manue legimus indecores? . . . "

Through the long night the evil tyrant Eteocles broods deeply on the tardiness of his cut-throats' return. Three reasons for the delay suggest themselves to him: his men lost their way; or they met with reinforcements from Argos; or (and here we come to the problem) something involving the neighbouring cities impeded them. As Mozley renders the Latin, an sceleris data fama per urbes / finitimas? paucosne, pater Gradiue, manue legimus indecores? . . . "

Quite so, that is what Eteocles must be wondering; but that is not the same thing as saying that "the neighbours have heard of his crime": we need to be told that they not only heard about it, but did something about it. A further point is that in line 4 the poet had referred to Eteocles’ action as a scelus, and as an observer of the action he was creating he was, of course, entitled to his comment: but would Eteocles himself refer to his planned ambush as a scelus? A bloodthirsty butcher like him? Of course not! The scelus Eteocles has in mind here is an armed insurrection against himself and for Tydeus on the part of the neighbouring cities. One trifling alteration to the paradosis will give us what we need:

\[
\text{an sceleris data flamma per urbes finitimas?}
\]

For the combination of dare with flammam/s see Ov. Met. 2. 811 and Sil. 5. 572.

3. 22

\[\text{i}am\ pude\text{t} incepti, i\text{am paenitet \ldots}\]

Lactantius, dimly aware of the problem, drew a fanciful and false distinction between pudet, which is not appropriate here, and piget, which is: nam pudet ad praeteritum spectat, piget ad futurum. That Eteocles should be “ashamed” of his undertaking is unthinkable: that he should “loathe” it or “bitterly regret” it is very much what he might do. Statius of course had in mind Verg. A. 5. 678.

3. 103–07

\[
\text{quo satis ore tuis famam uirtutibus addam, augur amate deis? non te cælestia frustra edocuit laurque sua dignatus Apollo est, 105 et nemorum Dodona parens Cirrhæaque uirgo audebat tacito populos suspendere Phoeb.}
\]

It was Jortin who postulated the lacuna after 105; “aliaqui et (106) uix intelligi potest,” declares Hill. If et, however, were corrupt, there might be no need for Jortin’s drastic expedient; and such indeed is the case. In 107 Markland had proposed gaudebit, which Hill pronounces “parum aptum”: on the contrary, it fails only in its choice of tense. This, I am sure, is what Statius wrote:

\[
\text{non te cælestia frustra edocuit laurque sua dignatus Apollo est, nec nemorum Dodona parens Cirrhæaque uirgo gaudebat tacito populos suspendere Phoeb.}
\]

There was no satisfaction for Dodona or Delphi in keeping folks in suspense when Phoebus was silent, since Maeon could issue prophecies instead. One final, perhaps rather dubious point concerns the aptness of *Phoeb*o, who had nothing whatever to do with the cult-site at Dodona. His father and he would, however, both be happily accommodated by the common noun diuo.

3. 108–09

\[ \text{nunc quoque Tartareae multitum diuisus Auerno} \\
Elysias, i, carpe plagas... \]

What is the point of quoque? Maeon has not been to Hell before now. I would much prefer i nunc Tartareae ...

3. 125–26

\[ \text{stat sanguineo discissus amictu} \\
Luctus atrox caesoque inuitat pectore matres.} \]

"Incites" is how Mozley renders inuitat, but his rendering rather invites inritat, altogether the more effective verb.

3. 127–28

\[ \text{scrutantur galeas frigentum inuentaque monstrant} \\
corpora, prociduae super externaque suosque.} \]

That the mothers should "scrutinize" the helmets of the dead warriors (in order to identify them, if possible) is altogether natural, but what would be the point of their "showing" the bodies they had found, when no distinction is here drawn between friend and foe (externaque suosque) and there were presumably bodies for the "showing" to be found all over the field? I suggest lustrant, continuing the idea of attempted identification.

3. 133–36

\[ \text{at uaga per dumos uacuique in puluere campi} \\
magna parens iuuenum, gemini nunc funeris, Ide} \\ squalentem sublata comam liuentiaque ora \\
ungue premens...} \]

Ide appears only here in the whole of the Thebaid, and, unless time has denied us knowledge of a well-known story, the epithet magna must surely have been as mystifying to Statius' audiences as it is to me now. An effective alternative to so cryptic an adjective would be ante, contrasting with nunc. In the next line, would somebody tell me what on earth is the point of the participle sublata, "uplifted" (hardly reiecta terrore, which was how Wakefield interpreted it)? Ide will hardly get far looking for her sons unless she keeps her head down. Mozley translates as though the text read diffusa, and that indeed is one out of a considerable number of participles which would at least give us some sense here.
3. 160–64

sed nec bellorum in luce patenti
conspicui fatis aeternaque gentibus ausi quaeasisi miserae uulnus memorabile matri, sed mortem obscuram † numerosaque funera passi,† heu quantus furto crur et sine laude iacet!

To obelize the whole of the second half of 163, as Hill does, is to evince an unwarranted defeatism: it is only in the word numerosaque (or its alternative numerandaque) that the fault lies; unless, that is, one can stomach Mozley’s defence of numeranda as meaning “suffering deaths which were (only) for the counting... they were only two more in the list of dead.” Equally silly is Lactantius’ gloss: quia inter paucos nec in magno proelio concidistis: neither of these considerations necessarily implies an obscure death. Try renuendaque, which is very nearly an anagram of nuierandaque.

3. 165–68

quin ego non dextras miseris complexibus ausim
diuidere et tanti consortia rumpere leti:
ite diu fratres indiscretique supremis
ignibus et caros urna confundite manes!

Tanti...leti is translated “so noble a death” by Mozley, but such a sense is gainsaid by the preceding context, which emphasises the obscurity of the young men’s death. Some point would be introduced if tanti concealed an original iuncti. Nor is there any point in saying ite diu fratres, since, in death as in life, they will always be brothers. Perhaps pit?

3. 183–88

sed nec ueteris cum regia Cadmi
fulmineum in cinerem monitis lunonis iniquee consedit, neque funerea cum laude potitus infelix Athamas trepido de Monte ueniret, semianimem heu laeto referens clamore Learchum,
hic gemitus Thebis ...

Does not consedit in 185 call for a corresponding reuenit in 186?

3. 229–35

“talis mihi, nate, per Argos, talis abi, sic ense madens, hac nubilus ira.
exturbent residues frenos et cuncta perosi
te cupiant, tibi praepites animasque manusque
deoueant; rape cunctantes et foedera turba, cui dedimus; tibi fas ipsos incendere bello
caelicolas pacemque meam ...”
I have three suggestions to make in this passage. For exturbent (cf. 233 turba) perhaps excittant; for cuncta, and as an alternative to uincla, proposed by Bentley, perhaps pacta; and for cui, which makes a sort of sense only if taken with tibi, and no sense at all with Hill’s punctuation, perhaps quae: foedera . . . quae dedimus will then correspond to pacem . . . meam, just as cunctantes corresponds to ipsos.

3. 241–43

sic Fata mihi nigraeque Sororum
iurauere colus: manet haec ab origine mundi fixa dies bello, populique in proelia nati.

How can distaffs “swear”? Could Statius conceivably have written ius neuere? It was in such terms (sic) that the Fates spun Jove’s authority (ius). Iam neuere or sic neuere would, I feel, be less forceful.

3. 293–94

(haud mora) desiluit curruclique receptam
laedit in amplexu dictisque ita mulcet amicis.

Various critics, including Peyraredus, Barthius and O. Müller, have taken exception to laedit and advanced conjectures designed to eliminate it. I agree with them that the idea of “harming” is out of place here (even if we contemplate a picture of a clumsy giant not knowing his own strength), and suggest claudit: Venus is swept snugly within Mars’ shield.

3. 320–23

uolat ignea moles
saeua dei mandata ferens, caelumque trisulca
territat omne coma iamdudum aut ditibus agris signa dare aut ponto miseris inuoluere nautas.

If anyone can believe, with Mozley, that territat means terrore cogit, μαμκαριζω. But in any case, what a pathetic thought! “The thunder-bolt compels the sky in terror to give signs to the fields.” How, precisely, does a thunderbolt make the sky do anything? And are “signs” all that will be given to the fields? How much more sense there would be in caelumque trisulca

territat omne coma, minitata aut ditibus agris
damna dare aut ponto miseris inuoluere nautas!

3. 330–32

sir nota in pascua taurus
bellator redit, adverso cui colla suoque
sanguine proscissisque natant palearibus armi.
Perhaps _aduersi_?

3. 333–35

\[\text{tunc quoque lassa tumet virtus multumque superbit}
\text{pectore despecto; uacae iacet hostis harena}
\text{turpe gemens crudosque uetat sentire dolores.}\]

Garrod and Snijder both objected to _pectore despecto_ (which is indeed a silly thing to say, whether _despecto_ be taken to mean “looked down on” or “despised”), but their conjectures are nugatory. Hill’s comment, “_lasse taurus despiciens . . . uulnera a fronte passa uidet et superbit_,” might have given him a clue but did not. Write _uulnere despecto._

3. 358–60

\[\text{nocte doloque uiri nudum ignarumque locorum}
\text{nequiquam clausere; iacent in sanguine mixti}
\text{ante urbem uacuam.}\]

To say that Thebes was an “empty” city would be a lie, and a transparent one: everybody knows that Tydeus has not killed the women, children and old men. There is regular confusion on the part of scribes between _uacuus_ and _uiduus_ (which are not synonyms), and it is the latter epithet which we require here.

3. 360–62

\[\text{nunc o nunc tempus in hostes,}
\text{dum trepidi exanguesque metu, dum funera portant,}
\text{nunc, socer, haec dum non manus excidit; . . .}\]

_Nunc socer haec dum non_ is what the Puteaneus (alone) offers; the other manuscripts give _dum capulo nondum_. Mozley, strangely, thinks that _haec dum non manus excidit_ has to be completed by the ablative _memoria_, notionally supplied; but could he, or anyone who accepts the reading of the Puteaneus, explain why the Argives would be likely to have short memories of Tydeus’ achievements, nay, why they might be likely to forget here and now, on the spot? _Capulo_, on the other hand, joins with _excidit_ to give admirable sense; and Garrod’s _dum capulo nondum haec_ misses the mark by no more than a hair’s breadth. Write _dum capulo haec nondum manus excidit._

3. 403–04

\[\text{. . . ubi maximus illi}
\text{sudor . . .}\]
Amongst other details of the fight, Tydeus relates ubi maximus ... sudor. The sweat of course is his own, not another’s; O. Müller surely cannot have been the only editor of Statius to recall Th. 2. 275 f. sed plurimus ipsi / sudor; and I cannot but marvel that nobody has thought of introducing ipsi into the present passage.

3. 460

mons erat audaci seductus in aethera dorso

Not seductus, surely, but subductus?

3. 516–20

"equidem uarii, pater, omina Phoebi saepe tuli: iam tum, prima cum pube uirentem semideos inter pinus me Thessala reges duceret, hic casus terraeque marisque canentem obstipuere duces, ... "

Hic in 519 is anything but clear, and the variant hi, offered by at least one manuscript (apud O. Müller), is useless. Perhaps hinc (cf. 516–17), meaning “from this source,” namely, from Phoebus.

3. 573

(te pudor et curae retinent per rura, Melampu)

Amphiaraus returns to Thebes, but Melampus stays in the country. Why? Because of “shame and cares,” say the manuscripts. Cares, they are understandable enough; but why on earth should Melampus be ashamed? All that he and Amphiaraus had done was, at Adrastus’ behest, to explore the will of heaven; and if heaven’s will was adverse, as indeed it was, that was nothing to cause him shame. Pavor, on the other hand, would be very much to the point.

3. 575–77

et iam suprema Tonantis iussa fremunt agrosque uiris annosaque uastant oppida

Premunt, not fremunt?

3. 602

diu tuto superum contemptor

For tuto Cassellanus 164 gives tutos; and there might be something to be said for tutus, to avoid adverbs in juxtaposition.
3. 697–98

aspice res humiles, atque hanc, pater, aspice prolem
exulis; huic olim generis pudor.

Argia pleads with her father for war, and, as an argument in its favour, urges that he leave no legacy of shame to his grandson Thessandrus. Surely that argument would be properly presented if in 698 we read huicne olim generis pudor?

3. 704–05

nescis, pater optime, nescis, quantus amor castae misero nupsisse marito.

"Thou knowest not, good father, thou knowest not what deep affection a husband's misery implants in a loyal bride" is how Mozley renders these lines; but I see no sense in this sentiment, even if syntax permitted it: are we seriously to believe that the wives of the disadvantaged love them more than other women love husbands for whom all is going well? Surely it all depends on the individual? Let me hazard the guess that 705 originally ran quam sit onus castae misero nupsisse marito.

That would be a true enough sentiment.

3. 718–20

tu solare uirum, neu sint dispendia iustae
dura morae: magnos cunctamur, nata, paratus.
proficitur bello.

The final parataxis here makes for a weak close to Adrastus' comforting speech. Perhaps

magnos cunctanti, nata, paratus
proficitur bello,

with a general statement about strategy by way of conclusion?

4. 38–42

rex tristis et aeger
pondere curarum propiorque abeuntibus annis inter adhortantes uix sponte incedit Adrastus, contentus ferro cungi latus; arma manipli
pone ferunt; . . .

It is a sad fact, but true, that all our years pass away, and so perhaps somebody can tell me how the words propior . . . abeuntibus annis (literally, “nearer to the passing years”) convey the notion that Adrastus is now not far from death? He is moreover dreadfully unhappy about embarking on the war and, after tristis, aeger pondere curarum and uix sponte incedit, it is hard to see how he could be “content” with anything to do with the business, be it wearing his sword or (so E. H. Alton in CQ 17 [1923] 175) surrounding himself with a bodyguard. I suggest non laetus ferro cingi latus. One final observation on this passage: manipli may be the reading of all the manuscripts, but it is still a ludicrous reading, since the arma are those of the king himself, and not even one platoon, let alone several (manipli), would be needed to carry them. The certain correxion ministri was advanced by Markland in his note on Silu. 5. 2. 154, and printed by O. Müller in his edition of 1870. Garrod and Klotz then concurred in forgetting about it altogether, and, not perhaps surprisingly, it failed to reemerge in Hill’s edition of 1983. I may note, by way of confirming Markland’s conjecture, that Par. lat. 13046 glosses manipli with armigeri.

4. 74–76

proxima longaeuo profert Dircaeus Adrasto
signa gener, cui bella fauent, cui commodat iras

cuncta cohors: ...

It would be premature to say of a warrior going into uncertain battle that bella fauent (and of Polynices it would, of course, be ultimately untrue), and in any case the anaphoric cui requires that both clauses have to do with the cohors: hence Bentley’s gerit, and Damsté’s fouent, to which I will now add the small adjustment fouet. That the whole cohort gave full support to its leader may pass unquestioned, but it is not the unanimity of the cohort which is in point here, as the sequel shows, but the nature of its composition: the succeeding lines tell us in some detail that the cohors was made up partly of Theban exiles, and partly of Peloponnesian troops: a mixed company, therefore, and mixta cohors is needed to introduce what follows.

4. 93–95

ecce inter medios patriae ciet agmina gentis
fulmineus Tydeus, iam laetus et integer artus, ut primae strepue re tubae: ...

It would be something of a medical miracle for a wounded man to recover at the first sound of the trumpet’s blast, but here there is no miracle: as lines 398 ff. of the previous book make clear, Idmon of Epidaurus had already attended to the wounds Tydeus had sustained. At Ov. Ep. 3. 86 all the manuscripts give impiger but the correct reading is integer, conjecturally retrieved by Hoocefftt: in the present passage the process of corruption has travelled in the opposite direction.
4. 105–06

Ioniiis et fluctibus hospita portu
Chalcis

Various cities heard the tidings of war, among them Chalcis, “welcome haven from Ionian billows” (as Mozley puts it). This sense, surely the one intended by Statius, would be better expressed if the text read Ioniiisque e fluctibus.

4. 110–11

omnibus aeratae propugnant pectora crates, pilaque saeua manu; patrius stat casside Mauors.

Saeua is, quite frankly, pitiful, just about the last adjective that a master composer would think of. Better by far would be sueta, after which patrius . . . Mauors will figure now as an elegant complementation.

4. 121–24

quos celer ambit
Asterion Dryopumque trahens Erinus aristas, et qui rura domant Epidauria (dexter Iaccho collis at Hennaeeae Cereri negat); . . .

The Dorian contingent assembles, amongst its number being those who dwell by the rivers Asterion and Erasinus. The picture of “Erasinus sweeping on his flood Dryopian harvests” bodes no good at all for the locals: if he carries away their crops on a regular basis, perhaps they should contemplate emigration! But no: what the river drags along are the harenas of Dryopia. The inhabitants of Epidaurus, on the other hand, live in hilly terrain, whereas rura are quintessentially Cerealia (Ov. Fast. 1. 683). Perhaps saxa, or possibly lustra?

4. 131–32

umeros ac pectora late
flammeus orbis habet

Habet is distinctly dull and inexplicit. Try obit.

4. 152–54

dat tamen haec iuuenum tercentum pectora, uulgus innumerum bello, quibus haud ammenta nec enses-triste micant.
Lactantius’ silly comment on innumerum bello should make everyone chuckle; everyone, that is, except those who edit the Thebaid. Hear what he says: “INNVMERVM BELLO expositio, quid sit ter centum pectora, uulgus innumerum: quia tam fortæ erant, ut multorum facta fortia sua uirtute pensarent.” First we have three hundred represented as “countless” when Adrastus’ own Argive contingent alone had amounted to three thousand (4. 63); then we have the suggestion that The Magnificent Three Hundred could counterbalance “the brave deeds of many,” for all that (as the succeeding context states) they were not armed with javelins or swords, but only with pine-wood staffs and arrows (a second-class military accoutrement, in other words)! The mistake made by Lactantius, and indeed by all editors of the Thebaid, stems from failure to see that Statius intended in numerum, “to make up the number,” and, not least because everybody appears to have made that same mistake, I am inclined to think that Statius separated in from numerum. Either therefore in numerum bello, or, as I should myself prefer, in belli numerum. The lads from Tiryns, to be blunt, are no more than a make-weight in the host from the Peloponnese.

4. 154–56

```plaintext
flauae capiti tergoque leonum
exuuiæ, gentilis honos; et pineus armat
stipes, inexhaustis artantur tela pharetris.
```

Perhaps inexhaustisque?

4. 168–71

```plaintext
squalet tripli ramosa corona Hydra recens obitu: pars anguibus aspera uius argento caelata micat, pars arte reperta
conditur et fuluo moriens nigrescit in auro.
```

In his apparatus criticus to 170 Hill argues that the transmitted form of words arte reperta may without any difficulty be retained if one understands arte to refer, not to the maker of the shield, but to Hercules and Iolaus who used a stratagem to kill the Hydra. By the same token, presumably, these two then embalm the Hydra in gold, as they also engrave it in silver? How very singular! As the thinking student of the Thebaid has for centuries observed, however, there is a fault in reperta, and conjectures proliferate like the suckers of the Hydra (torre repressa, arte reposta, retorta, repressa, aere perempta, altera reptans, etc.). “Part by a cunning device is sunken” translates Mozley, noting that “reperta must be corrupt, but no emendation seems convincing.” He and the others have missed the obvious: arte perita, which is almost invited by Mozley’s own translation.
4. 173–75

at laterum tractus spatio saque pectora seruat
nexilis innumero Chalybium subtemine thorax, horrendum, non matris opus.

I am sure we should all be relieved to hear that it was not Capaneus’ mother who knitted his corselet; but then wrought-ironwork is not to many women’s taste as an evening occupation. Strange that no one, not even Barthius (who expostulated on this “stulta lectio”), spotted horrendum Mauortis opus.

4. 182–86

hic fretus doctas anteire canendo Aonidas mutos Thamyris damnatus in annos
ore simul citharaque (quis obuia numina temnat?)
conticuit praeceps, qui non certamina Phoebi
nosset et inlustres Satyro pendente Celaenas.

I find a difficulty here in conticuit praeceps, and the lack of any obvious or necessary connexion with the qui-clause which follows. “Fell on the instant mute . . . for that he knew not what it was to strive with Phoebus . . .” is how Mozley translates, but his translation signifies naught to me: is there any sense in saying (in almost so many words) that, because he was no Marsyas, Thamyris fell silent? I feel pretty certain that Statius did not write praeceps here, but what he did write for the moment eludes me. The kind of sentiment that seems to be called for is conticuit, felix qui non certamina Phoebi

nosset et inlustres Satyro pendente Celaenas.

To be rendered mute is good luck by comparison with being hung up and flayed.

4. 196–99

illa libens (nam regum animos et pondera belli
hac nutare uidet, pariter si prouidus heros militet) ipsa sacros gremio Polynicis amati exuerat cultus haud maesta atque insuper addit: . . .

I have to say that I do not follow Hill’s defence of si against the alternative reading ni(si) in 197: “alii bellare recusabant si Amphiaraus pariter . . . militabit, i.e. contradicet”: Argia (illa 196) wants war for the sake of her husband Polynices, and she sees that the war effort will fail if . . . if what? Amphiaraus, the prouidus heros, has already been compelled to war by Fate (189 f. Atropos had thrust arms into his reluctant hand), and Eriphyle’s treachery has merely clinched his doom. Surely in this context, with Argia determined to bring on the war and Amphiaraus already committed to it against his will, there is no point in canvassing the possibility that he might not in fact take part in the action to come. Ni or nisi, therefore, is required here. In line 198 the feminine pronoun ipsa is quite superfluous: of course no one else is going to remove Argia’s necklace. Militet ipse, on the other hand, would add welcome emphasis to Amphiaraus’ hoped-for involvement. Here, therefore, ipsa should be changed to ipse, just as, conversely, ipse was changed to ipsa in line 193 by Sandstroem, with the justified approbation of subsequent editors. Finally, in line 199 I should say that there is much to be said for reading exuerat nexus, in other words taking the verb from the Puteaneus and the noun from the other manuscripts.

4. 204–05

\[ \text{cum tu claudare minanti} \]
\[ \text{casside ferratusque sones} \]

Perhaps ferratunque?

4. 214–17

\[ \text{Taenariis hic celsus equis, quam dispares coetu} \]
\[ \text{Cyllarus ignaro generarat Castore prolem,} \]
\[ \text{quassat humum;} \]

Taenariis begins a new paragraph in modern editions, and the reader’s attention is now turned back from Argia and Eriphyle to the doomed prophet. In this context hinc would be better than hic.

4. 282–84

\[ \text{hi lucis stupuisse uices noctisque feruntur} \]
\[ \text{nubila et occiduum longe Titana secuti} \]
\[ \text{desperasse diem.} \]

The primitive Arcadians were terrified by eclipses is what Statius is saying here, but the expression as given by the manuscripts is awkward, with lucis . . . uices an ambivalent phrase as well able to signify the return of light as its departure, and nubila lacking point as a qualification of noctis. Clearer by far, and not, I venture to suggest, appreciably less attractive, would be fugam for uices and solis for noctis.

4. 292–94

\[ \text{uenit et Idaeis ululatibus aemulus Azan} \]
\[ \text{Parrhasiique duces, et quae risistis, Amores,} \]
\[ \text{grata pharetrato Nonacria rura Tonanti.} \]
I do not understand risistis here. Contingents come from many regions to aid Parthenopaeus, and among them is Nonacris, a region "pleasing to the Thunderer" because it was there that he seduced Callisto. Very well, but why should the Loves smile or laugh at the countryside itself? If Jove had had an affair in Golders Green or Pratts Bottom, would the Loves smile or laugh at Golders Green or Pratts Bottom? The idea is idiotic. The verb needed here is quaesistis.

4. 299–303

Arcades hi, gens una uiris, sed dissona cultu scinditur: hi Paphias myrtos a stirpe recuruant 300 et pastorali meditantur proelia trunco, his arcus, his tela sudes, his cassida crines integit, . . .

Hi in 299 strikes me as an inept anticipation of the string of demonstratives which peppers 300 to 303, and the jump from Arcades to uiris is distinctly inelegant. A smoother, and a clearer, run would be provided by Arcadibus.

4. 360–62

... tamen et Boeotis urbibus ultrix
adspirat ferri rabies, nec regis iniqui subsidio quantum socia pro gente mouentur.

In 356 we were told that the people of Thebes itself were anything but eager for the war (bellator nulli caluit deus), so what is the point of et in 360? Surely that must imply that the Thebans too were in the grip of ferri rabies, and that, as the preceding lines make abundantly clear, is just not the case. Perhaps tantum Boeotis urbibus: only the cities of Boeotia were eager for war, and then not so much on behalf of the king as on behalf of their kinsfolk.

4. 387–88

aut tumidum Gangen aut claustria nouissima Rubrae Tethyos Eoasque domos flagrante triumpho perfuris, . . .

In 387 I fancy the second aut should be et.

4. 403–04

a miseri morum! bellastis sanguine tanto
et saltum dux alter habet.

Thus ends the prophetic ranting of the leader of the Bacchanals. The two bulls fight to the death, and another lords it over the mountain pastures, the clause in 404 referring, as Lactantius informs us, to Creon, who took over after the death of Eteocles and Polynices. Of preceding scholars, only Baehrens, so far as I can discover, was troubled by morum, but his quorum is plainly wrong. "Miserable and wicked" is Mozley's translation, and a very free one it is too! Furthermore, it is not the character of the two brothers that needs emphasis at this point, but the sad outcome of their fighting. Mortis, I suppose, is a possibility, but sortis, or even eventus, would accord better with the sequel.

4. 409–18

 renegotio referat deos non larga caede iuuuncum, non alacri penna aut uerum salientibus extis, nec tripode implicito numerisque sequentibus astra, turea nec supra volitante altaria fumo tam penitus, durae quam Mortis limite manes elicitos, patuisse reperat; Lethaeaque sacra et mersum Ismeni subter confinia ponto miscentis parat ante ducem, circumque bidentum uisceribus laceris et odori sulphuris aura graminibusque nouis et longo murmure purgat.

W. S. Watt, in Eranos 85 (1987) 50, proposes to read uiuum for uerum in 410, and this seems to me right; but other difficulties remain, I believe, and they concern the word elicitos in 414 and the words parat ante in 416. Consider first the overall syntactical structure of 409 to 414: ille (sc. Tiresias) refert deos non tam penitus caede iuuuncum patuisse quam manes elicitos fails because manes elicitos does not properly answer to the sequence of ablatives introduced by caede iuuuncum: indeed, it breaks the structure completely. What is required is not elicitos but rather si cieat, which leads the thought naturally and easily to the calling up of Laius (414–18). "'Parat' must be taken both with 'Lethaeaque sacra,' and with 'ducem,' i.e., Laius," says Mozley in his note on these lines, but parat ducem strikes me as an exceedingly odd expression. I suggest that what Statius wrote was not parat ante ducem but petit arte ducem, with arte replacing the gratuitous ante as an introduction to the rituals described in 416 to 418.

4. 434–42

 extra inmane patent, tellus Mauortia, campi; fetus ager Cadmo, durus qui uomere primo post consanguineas acies sulcosque nocentes ausus humum uersare et putria sanguine prata eruit; ingentes infelix terra tumultus lucis adhuc medio solaque in nocte per umbras expirat, nigri cum uana in proelia surgunt terrigenae; fugit incepto tremibundus ab aruo agricola insanique domum rediere iuuenci.
Hill makes much of his heavier punctuation after campi in 434, but makes nothing of his lighter punctuation after Cadmo in 435, when the former is just wrong, but the latter disastrous. If a comma only follows Cadmo, then Cadmus becomes the subject of the relative clause which follows, and we are confronted with an extraordinary inversion of events, whereby Cadmus’ ploughing of this patch of earth comes after, not before, the war between Eteocles and Polynices, and, what is yet more remarkable, after his own sowing of the Spartoi! At the very least, a full stop is required after Cadmo (as was proposed first by Barthius); but that, I believe, is not enough. To save time and space, let me come straight to what I think is needed in 434–35, and that is:

extra inmane patet tellus Mauortia Cadmi,
    fetus agrer bello.

Patet indeed is given by a number of manuscripts, but tellus, campi and agrer is too much of one thing, and fetus calls out for an ablative indicating the bloody crop produced by the agrer. The subject of the relative clause now becomes, as become it must, the agricola of 442. One further correction is needed, and that is eruere for eruit in 438.

4. 455–57

    trunca dehinc nemora aduoluunt, maestusque sacerdos
    tres Hecatae totidemque satis Acheronte nefasto virginiubus iubet esse focos.

Maestus is disquietingly pointless: Tiresias is here merely doing his job, and emotion will not be a help at this juncture, only a hindrance. I think Statius wrote ternaque or triplicique.

4. 473–79

    "Tartareae sedes et formidabile regnum
    Mortis inexplatae, tuque, o saeuisime fratum, ...

soluite pulsanti loca muta et inane seuerae Persephones uulgusque caua sub nocte repostum
    elicite, et plena redeat Styga portitor alno.

Two comments on 479. First, let me commend the tentative suggestion made by Rubenbauer in ThLL, s.v. “elicio,” that Statius might have written eicite; and I commend it the more warmly since it was with eicite already in mind as a possibility that I made my way to his article in search of evidence (which I did not find) that elicere might be used, not of calling out, but of casting out. Then there is redeat, defended against conjecture by Klotz (“quasi redire Styga non latinum esset”—well, is it?) and by Hill, who adduces the Virgilian redire uiam and its Statian imitation, together with
Hor. Sat. 1. 6. 94, where the verb is not redire but remeare. Apropos of which, it was a pity that no one told Garrod that the third person singular of the present subjunctive of remeare is not remeat.

4. 514–15

scimus enim et quidquid dici noscique timetis et turbare Hecaten . . .

Perhaps poscique for noscique? After all, if something is said, it may be presumed to be known.

4. 614–15

iacet ille in funere longo,
quam fremis, et iunctae sentit confinia mortis.

Longo seems a strangely pointless adjective in this context: of course death is long, but how is that fact relevant to the still living Oedipus? Much more to the point would be uiuo.

4. 664–66

isque ubi puluere a Nemeen efferuere nube
conspicit et solem radiis ignescere ferri, neicum compositas bellii in certamina Thebas, . . .

Madvig, Koestlin, Baehrens, Slater and Garrod had all taken offence at the phrase solem radiis ignescere ferri, but all of them, according to Klotz, “diminish the poetic force of the passage,” and Hill is evidently of the same opinion as Klotz. It is thus “poetical,” in their view, to say that “the sun grows hot with the rays of the iron”; others, however, might say that it was not so much “poetical” as “lunatic.” The various conjectures so far propounded may be found in the apparatus criticus of Klotz’s edition (for Hill has time only for Madvig’s suggestion, and then, one suspects, simply because it is also found as a reading in a manuscript). To them let me add one more: for et solem read atque solum.

4. 686–87

Argolicos paulum mihi fontibus amnes
stagnaque et errantes obducite puluere riuos.

Fontibus is absolutely pointless. What is needed is a word which will correspond to puluere, and that is sordibus.

4. 691–92

uium coeptis indulgent astra, meaeque
aestifer Erigones spumat canis.
Sirius is indeed represented in Latin literature as suffering from hydrophobia (see OLD s.v.), but any suggestion here of a liquid secretion in the form of saliva would be at odds with Bacchus’ insistence that the stars also are helping to dry Argos up completely. The conjecture I propose is one of the easiest in the book: read spirat for spumat.

4. 723–24

> una tamen tacitas, sed iussu numinis, undas, haec quoque, secreta nutrit Langia sub umbra.

I do not see the force of haec quoque, and note that Mozley, revealingly, takes no account of it; sed, moreover, is not the word we want in 723, as Mozley’s “and she” makes clear. I suggest that we read:

> una tamen tacitas ut iussu numinis undas sic quoque secreta nutrit Langia sub umbra:

although her waters are silenced by Bacchus’ command, even so Langia keeps them flowing on in secret.

4. 725–27

> nondum illi raptus dederat lacrimabile nomen Archemorus, neci fama deae; tamen auia seruat et nemus et fluium; manet ingens gloria nympham.

Tantum for tamen? The fact that Langia is not yet famous is no impediment to her preserving her grove and her river; but preserving her grove and her river is all that she can do at present.

4. 753–56

> “diua potens nemorum (nam te uultusque pudorque mortali de stirpe negant), quae laeta sub isto igne poli non quaeris aquas, succurre propinquis gentibus; ...”

And so mortals are denied the feelings of modesty (pudor), are they? What a very novel twist to the traditional view, of Jove, for example, and Venus, those paragons of immodesty! Of course it was not Hypsipyle’s modesty that seemed to deny her mortality, but her decor. And it is her decor, as expressed in the adjective pulchro (747) which leads us to the second problem in this passage, for Hypsipyle is not cheerful (laeta) but sad (pulchro in maerore). Appreciably more appropriate to this context than laeta would be sola.

4. 772–73

> dixit, et orantis media inter anhelitus ardens uerba rapit, cursuque animae labat arida lingua.

Where is the object of rapit? It cannot be uerba, for that forms part of the phrase media inter ... uerba and cannot be coerced into performing a second function. Why not orantem, therefore? Then there is the question of the aptness of rapit, apt enough indeed as long as uerba was imagined to be its object, but not if the object is orantem. Capit, on the other hand, would suit well enough.

4. 779–80

at nostris an quis sinus, uberaque ulla,
scit deus;

I cannot remember ever coming across an quis as an alternative to numquis or (though less credibly in this passage) ecquis in subordinate clauses, and Kühner–Stegmann, Lat. Gramm. I 634 offers only the slightest attestation, and that in the comic writers, for the use of an quis in primary clauses. I am inclined to think that Statius here wrote numquis.

4. 805–06

pars cingunt, pars arta plebe sequuntur
praecelerantque ducem.

I cannot imagine why nobody, apparently, has proposed praecelerantue.

4. 816–20

incubuere uadis passim discrimine nullo
turba simul primique, nequit secemere mixtos
aqua sitis, frenata suis in curribus intrant armenta, et pleni dominis armisque feruntur
quadripedes;

For frenata suis in curribus ... armenta Mozley gives “bridled horses with their chariots,” and the question at once arises why Statius should have preferred in to cum; to which question the answer is that in was not Statius’ preference but came in as a scribal aberration. Then, there is the matter of the quadrupeds described as “full” of riders and armour: did anyone ever consciously so describe a mounted charger? The right word here is proni, not pleni.

4. 820–24

hos turbo rapax, hos lubrica fallunt
saxa, nec implicitos fluvio reuerentia reges proterere aut mersisse uado clamantis amici
ora. fremunt undae, longusque a fontibus amnis
diripitur;
Fremunt undae—what is this to the business? No statement about this river could be less relevant at a time when men and beasts are hurling themselves into the water all along the length of the river, right back to its source, and the noise of the river must have been drowned by the noise of men, beasts and clanking metal. Perhaps ferunt undas, or premunt undas?

***

Let me end by listing a number of unpublished conjectures by Gilbert Wakefield (1756–1801) and Jeremiah Markland (1693–1776). Those by Wakefield in Books 1 and 2 I presented in my previous paper (231 n. 7); I now add those in Books 3 to 12. The conjectures by Markland, which I now give for all twelve books, may be found in a British Library copy of Gronovius, shelfmark 1067. a. 17.

First then, Wakefield’s contributions: 3. 109 amnis; 207 lumina; 257 fruges; 375 nuptis; 379 blanditusque; 505 pacabile (?); 531 fuluos; 644 uictos; 4. 55 toto; 217 intermicat; 224 euitata; 254 deas; 255 intult; 308 his; 314 corrupta; 327 albis; 366 turgida; 434 campis; 464 sanguen (= P); 550 quo legit er; 608 albumue; 731 arida (= Schrader apud Haupt); 734 et caeclis; 5. 45 ulua; 95 trementem; 100 it Pallados; 161 coniectis (= Schrader); 329 et tutum; 489 accensa ‘sr; 497 iacentem (= Peyra redes); 586 fronti; 708 calenti; 727 numele; 731 prior (= δ); 732 arrexerat; 6. 26 pollentis; 97 trementes; 196 teneora ora; 208 exundat; 303 tenero; 678 arida; 7. 69 in tegmine; 202 terras . . . . impetat; 311 furent ingentia; 453 parantum; 471 rubet; 565 coeli quondam; 595 illi; 626 uexat uel uersat; 634 fassa manum uel missa manu; 650 ueritus . . . . et mansisse; 8. 70 alterni . . . . leti; 398 clipei clipeis; 575 raptat; 689 iam saeucor; 712 permixtis; 9. 72 torta; 114 corpus agir; 215 sic saltam; 350 flamina; 419 iarque (?); 621 lacrimisque; 873 aspera; 10. 308 colla reducta; 523 mirantur agri; 735 alta; 762 at uos o! superi; 823 saeutit; 833 acta iouem; 11. 165 gerentem; 285 primitiae; 562 peractus; 12. 69 sortis (= Niδ Schrader); 232 rumpit iter; 361 qui uacat.

The contributions by Markland are as follows: 1. 65 explicui; 130 socii- . . . . regni; 202 omnia nutu; 226 Aoniae . . . . Thebes; 298 hic Tyrio; 517 comantes; 2. 325 longum; 347 difficilemenque suis; 412 inertes; 520 damnatisque; 573 confessus (= Dδ); 609 minitantem uana; 3. 250 uergam; 329 torquet . . . . sitis; 365 exiunt; 654 et aram (?); 4. 114 animis (?); 353 praemisere; 522 liuentisque; 746 ferebat; 5. 20 tu tamen; 554 adiacet; 612 uersan tem; 616 et blanda; 668 meritus; 6. 150 uigemus; 513 qui mortis; 829 cara labores; 847 perfusa; 7. 13 prope r; 8. 40 superis quin; 46 pandam mea regna; 217 obreper; 392 regentum; 654 in uulnera; 9. 159 is functis; 319 Ismene cre tus; 370 nunc punto submersa; 385 heu (= various manuscripts); 415 riros; 419 simulque; 514 Mycane; 780 miserum (= Niδ); 824 mersum tacito; 897 it sonus; 10. 46 balatusque repens; 129 iura (= various manuscripts); 167 it furor; 470 qui tremor elisa; 522 inque immane; 671 i prior; 819 reflexos (?); 824 omnis, eunt; 907 superum chorus; 11. 667 confessus tacuit; 12. 249 magnae strident; 587 rogantes.

University of London