An Early Question

I would be very interested to research how Korean American Christians (specifically those who are Catholic) are able to “keep the faith” when at the University of Illinois, as so much of their traditional worship seems to be tied to family and community presence. Indeed, whereas Catholics of other cultures more or less worship together and are generally able to maintain similarities in the way the Mass is conducted across geographical boundaries, Korean Catholics are largely cut off and tied exclusively to their own communities. My research then, would be to find out what students on campus do when unable to attend Church at their traditional venues: be it adapt to the larger Catholic community at U of I, conduct small personal gatherings, or maybe simply not attend unless on break. Whatever the case, I think studying this topic further could prove quite interesting and certainly relevant to campus life.
