

After the first flight, it is like a lot of training. (At the flight school) I had to take a month of a lot because I was on a football team in high school. So, it took me a year and a half and the average is like a year. I wasn't sure if I really wanted to do this. And I ended up I really liked it. And I really wanted to do it for my career. Because I never got tired of doing it. I think this is crime that aviation students have to go through. (to major in aviation) So that is total 9 hours of aviation class for a week. (that aviation student has to take each semester). But you don't get any hours of flight time; the only class that gives you credit hour is the ground school. So basically, the six hours of flight time that you have to fly for a week, that counts nothing towards the credit hour. So it is 21 hours of class that you have.

My ultimate goal is to be an airline pilot like for American or United, something like that. After college, I will be basically looking for any job that will be able to increase my hours. In order to apply to American or United, you need almost three thousands. So you need to find a job that will increase your flight time. I would say 80% of students have the ultimate goal becoming an airline pilot. But there is also 20% that wanna do something else, maybe like a executive pilot flying for a company.
