

Illinois Digital Environment for Access to Learning and Scholarship (IDEALS)
Copyright and Intellectual Property Policy

The current and past versions of the IDEALS Copyright and Intellectual Property Policy are available at: <http://hdl.handle.net/2142/235>.

If you hold copyright:

If you hold copyright over an item deposited in IDEALS you retain that copyright when it is deposited. All copyright holders must agree to a non-exclusive distribution and preservation license that allows us to disseminate the deposited work over the web and make copies of that work for preservation purposes. The copyright holder may distribute or formally publish their work in the same or different form without obtaining permission or notifying IDEALS staff. The IDEALS page will explicitly state that the deposited work is protected by copyright. IDEALS does not seek or claim copyright on any deposited works, nor does it seek revenue from deposited works.

When you deposit a work, you may note when a work is made available under a Creative Commons license. Authors that wish to consider setting conditions on re-use (outside of fair use) of their materials may wish to see <http://creativecommons.org/about/licenses/meet-the-licenses> and the Creative Commons copyright license program.

If you do deposit this material into IDEALS, you must agree to the terms in the non-exclusive distribution and preservation license for IDEALS. This allows us to disseminate the deposited work over the web and make copies of that work for preservation purposes.

Depositing your work in IDEALS automatically provides a time and date stamp that will verify your expression of an idea or document your research at a given point in time.

If you have signed copyrights over to a third party:

If you have signed over your copyright to a publisher or other third party, you may still be able to deposit that work into IDEALS.

More and more publishers, whether commercial or non-profit, will permit the deposit of a pre-print or a post-print online and include this permission into their copyright agreement with authors. If you would like to know what your publisher permits, visit the Sherpa Web site at <http://www.sherpa.ac.uk/romeo.php> and search or browse for the name of your publisher. If your publisher is not listed in the Sherpa database, IDEALS staff would be happy to help you investigate this issue with your publisher. When you publish you can also negotiate to submit your work to IDEALS. The University Library's Scholarly Communication also has additional information and resources.

If you have permission to deposit this material into IDEALS, you must agree to the terms in the non-exclusive distribution and preservation license for IDEALS. This allows us to disseminate the deposited work over the web and make copies of that work for preservation purposes. If there are specific conditions that the copyright holder makes for the deposit of the material (for example that it must include the citation information or must be embargoed for a specific period of time), you must follow those conditions within IDEALS.

If the University of Illinois holds copyright:

In some cases (see <http://www.uillinois.edu/trustees/rules.cfm#art3> and specifically, <http://www.uillinois.edu/trustees/rules.cfm#sec34> for more information), the copyright to your work may be held by the University of Illinois. For example, if the author is an academic professional at the University and the work is authored as a condition of his/her employment, then the University typically owns the copyright. For the cases where the University owns the copyright, it is not feasible or advisable for authors to request permission to deposit from the Board of Trustees for every work. IDEALS requests that the author determines whether or not the work is appropriate for deposit by contacting the head of the unit where the work was created and asking for permission. For example, in a laboratory, a research scientist may wish to ask the head of the center or academic unit whether deposit is appropriate.

If you have permission to deposit this material into IDEALS, you must agree to the terms in the non-exclusive distribution and preservation license for IDEALS. This allows us to disseminate the deposited work over the web and make copies of that work for preservation purposes.

If the work is in the public domain or not subject to copyright:

If the work is in the public domain (for example, a work published before 1923) or not subject to copyright (for example, a data set), you may deposit the work into IDEALS if you have the authority to do so. For example, if you have a digitized version of a public domain work that you obtained from an archives, you may need to request permission from that archives to deposit the item; likewise, if you deposit a research data set that is not subject to copyright, you should have full permissions from the responsible party (Lab director, PI) to deposit. We request that you note the status (in the public domain, not subject to copyright) of the work in the Rights field when depositing the work.
