Purpose: Managing money means making choices. Quite simply, there is never enough money for all the things we’d like. This game will help you decide what is most important to you.

How To Play

Round 1: Today, you have a “20★” income. Go through the categories in the game, make one selection in each category, and place an ★ in the accompanying box or boxes. Mark as many as 20 boxes with your ★s.

Example
Blair Williams chooses to rent an apartment. This housing category requires 3 ★s. She now has 17 ★s left to spend on the other categories.

Housing

a. Living with parents
b. Share apartment, dormitory, fraternity, or sorority.
c. Rent a place of your own.
d. Other.

You may change your mind about the number of stars you have spent for a category — just go back and erase. Don’t spend more than 20 stars.

If you are thinking of situations not covered by these categories or choices, add some of your own. You may also spend more or less than suggested for a particular item if your reasons are justifiable. Go ahead and make your choices.

Round 2: Now, pretend that you lost your part-time job. Your income has been cut back. You now have 13 ★s. Circle your new choices.

Discussion Questions

What was the first item you gave up when your income dropped? What was the last item you were willing to give up? Why?

Compare your spending choices to those of other players. How do personal values, goals, and past experiences affect each person’s choices? Did you include savings in your spending plan? How much do you think is needed in an emergency reserve account for unexpected expenses?
