Ever run up a fever trying to run down a fact?

There's no denying that frustration is an occupational hazard for librarians who have to gather news facts in a hurry. Yet it's a risk you can easily avoid.

How? By using The New York Times Index. It leads you straight to the information you are seeking. Saves you many a headache . . . and loads of time.

Pick up any semi-monthly issue of the Index, and what do you find? Over 20,000 news facts from The New York Times . . .

organized for quick reference under thousands of different headings;
dated so you can look up the story in any newspaper that you file;
summarized so completely that further research is often unnecessary.

And the cost is low . . . only $35 for 24 issues of the twice-monthly Index (a full year's service) and $35 for the Cumulative Annual Volume. Or you can get both at a combination price of only $50 for the complete service—a saving of $20.

If you've been getting along without The New York Times Index, why not discover how much better you can be getting along with it! Your subscription order, mailed to the Library Services Department at the address below, will receive immediate attention.
