How to bury
a problem
before
it
buries
you!

When you're faced with a problem of gathering news facts in a hurry, you can get buried up to your neck in hit-or-miss research.

Or you can stay in the clear by consulting The New York Times Index—the fast, dependable guide to facts in the news.

Twice a month, a new 64 page edition brings you over 20,000 news items classified alphabetically. Each item is dated to show when the story appeared in The New York Times, or when it may have run in any other newspaper you file.

And thousands of these events are summarized right in The Index—so thoroughly in many cases that you have all the facts you need.

In libraries all over the country, The New York Times Index is speeding up research and cutting down waste motion. And the cost is low . . . only $35 for 24 issues of the twice-monthly Index (a full year's service) and $35 for the Cumulative Annual Volume. Or you can get both at a combination price of only $50 for the complete service—a saving of $20.

If you've been passing up the advantages offered you by this famous time-saving, labor-saving service, there is no better time than now to get your subscription started. Your order, mailed to the Library Services Department at the address below, will get immediate attention.
