How to save time in a big way

Are you using up too much time in running down facts that appeared in the news?

Maybe you need The New York Times Index.

Twice-a-month, you get a 64 page book containing over 20,000 references to recent events. The important ones are summarized — with enough facts in many cases to make further research unnecessary.

In every case, you are shown how to quickly find the full story that appeared in The New York Times. And because the Index gives you the original publication date of each event, you can use it in locating items in any newspaper you keep on file.

It's the only service that summarizes and classifies the news alphabetically according to subjects, persons, and organizations. You get a day by day history of the world in all its branches of activity — government, politics, economics, science, military affairs, agriculture, religion, the fine arts, etc.

If you have not yet started a file of The New York Times Index, let us enter your subscription for 1953. The full year's service — 24 issues — costs only $35. For only $15 more ($50 in all) you can have your subscription include the 1952 Cumulative Annual Volume, now in preparation.

In saving you so much time, the service will pay for itself quickly. Send your order in today.
