How students at Arizona State use the University of Michigan Library.

Arizona State is building their library from the University of Michigan Undergraduate Library shelflist. Whenever they need books on any subject, they check the shelflist to see what books the University of Michigan is using. Then they can order the same books for themselves.

The University of Michigan Library is considered the finest undergraduate collection in the country. With funds provided by a foundation grant, a staff of librarians spent years reviewing more than 400,000 books before 57,000 were finally selected.

A costly book-selection project like this is out of the question for an individual school such as Arizona State. But with the UM shelflist, it is possible for them to offer the same 57,000 carefully selected titles.

What Arizona State is doing, any college can do. If you're starting or expanding your library, it's a sure way to get the best books on every subject. Without screening thousands of books yourself.

At University Microfilms, all 57,000 file cards from the University of Michigan shelflist are available. For $100, you can get the entire file on 35 mm. microfilm. For $875, you can get bound volumes with six cards to a page. Or you can get 3" x 5" file cards in shelflist order for $1900.

If you'd like more information about the University of Michigan shelflist, write us: University Microfilms, Inc., 313 N. First Street, Ann Arbor, Michigan.
