The Johnny Appleseed of Libraries

THOMAS BRAY'S GRAND DESIGN

ACRL Publications in Librarianship No. 35
Charles Laughler

His design was to establish a system of clerical and secular libraries throughout the colonies—helping ministers in their role as Christian educators and fostering Anglicanism in America. This monograph traces the efforts of the eighteenth-century scholar and missionary in collecting funds, securing placement of books, helping to pass needed legislation, compiling bibliographies, and planning libraries.

Despite constant resistance from many sources, Thomas Bray founded more than one hundred libraries between New York and Georgia. His cultural significance is established and his advocating a network of public libraries moved him one hundred years ahead of his time.

Of special interest to students of colonial and library history and to all seeking an understanding of the relationship between culture and libraries.

ISBN 0-8389-0151-4 (1973) Cloth $9.95
