Nuclear Energy Powers Our Submarines, Rocket Fuel Propels Our Jet Aircraft, and Diesel Gasoline Runs Our Tanks, But What Drives Our Soldiers Into Battle?

COMBAT MOTIVATION
The Behavior of Men in Battle
Anthony Kellett

"I did not feel afraid... there was so much to think about, so much to distract my attention, that I forgot to feel afraid. The noise, the smoke, the smell of gunpowder, the rat-tat of rifle and machine gun fire combined to numb the senses. I was aware of myself and others going forward, but of little else." — Excerpt from Combat Motivation

"What men will fight for seems to be worth looking into", H.L. Mencken noted shortly after the first world war. In his new book, COMBAT MOTIVATION, Anthony Kellett assesses the factors that influence the soldiers commitment and willingness to fight. This practical and contemporary look at combat morale examines how our modern day defense policy of using nuclear arms as deterrents has led to the revival of more conventional means of warfare, and a return to the environment in which soldiers actually engage in battle. Much of the evidence is historical, based on the attitudes and behavior of participants in a variety of combat settings, including the 1973 Arab-Israeli conflict, and the U.S. experience in Viet Nam.

COMBAT MOTIVATION also discusses how the development of new military technologies and the central role required in structuring modern defense strategies, have caused today's military elite to adapt many of their managerial methods from the world of business. Military professionals are now the designers and managers of weapons systems, as well as the leaders of men in battle. This exciting new study takes a look at the organizational and institutional aspects of the new military and what influences impel a soldier into battle. Besides contributing to our understanding of this complex and fascinating subject, COMBAT MOTIVATION will be of a practical value for those who might someday be called to demonstrate their combat willingness. This book is sure to become standard reference in both military and business circles.
