Acknowledgments

During the last year, a number of people made significant contributions to the publication of C&RL. The editor particularly appreciates the help of editorial assistants John Antinori and Mary Steckel. Without their support the day to day work of reviewing and editing could not have been accomplished. Book Review editors Stephen Lehmann and Robert Walther and Research Notes editor Larry Oberg have offered valuable counsel on a variety of topics. Their continuing enthusiasm is most beneficial to the journal’s well-being. Jay Martin Poole often advises the editor on matters of style and layout; his editing of my editorials provides a smoother and more elegant text. ALA Publishing staff has helped the journal to change not only its size and style, but also its means of production. Text is now submitted and edited electronically. Editorial Board members have given excellent advice throughout the year on a variety of matters large and small. They have also participated actively in the enormous task of reviewing. Many other librarians have assisted in the reviewing process, and their work has given the journal a broader base of participation. These librarians include:
