
About the Contributors

MARY BIGGS is Director of Libraries and Associate Professor at Mercy College in Westchester County, New York. She has spoken and published widely on public services, library education, library history, and scholarly and literary publishing.

YALE M. BRAUNSTEIN is Associate Professor at the School of Library and Information Studies of the University of California at Berkeley. He has published articles on the economics of information and communications including "Setting Technical Compatibility Standards: An Economic Analysis" (Antitrust Bulletin, vol. 30, Summer 1985, pp. 337-355) and "Economics of Intellectual Property Rights in the International Arena" (Journal of the American Society for Information Science, vol. 40, January 1989, pp. 12-16). His current research interests include economic models of the production and use of information, market structure in information and communication industries, and the economics of intellectual property rights.

NANCY L. EATON is Dean of Library Services, Iowa State University of Science and Technology. She is a past president of the Library and Information Technology Association and is currently a member of the OCLC Board of Trustees. She served as a member of the ALA Special Committee on Freedom and Equality of Access to Information (1987-1988). She is co-principal investigator for the National Agricultural Text Digitizing Project. Among her publications, she co-authored CD-ROM and Other Optical Information Systems: Implementation Issues for Libraries (Oryx Press, 1989).

EDWARD B. JENKINSON is a Professor, Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana.

PAUL MCGREAL was graduated from Williams College in 1989, and he is now pursuing a Juris Doctorate at Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Texas. His work in progress deals with the Security and Exchange Commission's rule making authority. He is presently an editor of the Southwestern Law Journal.

SANDRA N. MILEVSKI is a Research Associate at the U.S. National Commission on Libraries and Information Science where she is currently developing a hypertext database for the White House Conference on Library and Information Services. Her other areas of endeavor include legislation and information policy. Previous positions were with the Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress, and the Library Programs Office, U.S. Department of Education. She has worked in public, school, special, and research libraries and has published on information policy topics.

R. KATHLEEN MOLZ is the Melvil Dewey Professor of Library Service at Columbia University. Her publications include Federal Policy and Library Support (MIT Press, 1976), for which she received the 1977 Ralph R. Shaw Award, and National Planning for Library Service, 1935-1975 (ALA, 1984). Most recently, she has written The Federal Roles in Support of Academic and Research Libraries (ALA, 1991). She served as the chairperson of the ALA Intellectual Freedom Committee (1973-75) and as the president of the Freedom to Read Foundation (1977-79).

JAMES H. MOOR is Professor of Philosophy at Dartmouth College in Hanover, New Hampshire. He is currently chair of the Philosophy Department, member of the American Philosophical Association Subcommittee on Technology and Ethics, and a member of the National Advisory Board of the Research Center on Computing and Society. His research publications include the areas of philosophy of artificial intelligence and computer ethics.

CHARLES B. OSBURN has been dean of libraries and professor, School of Library and Information Studies, at the University of Alabama since 1986. He holds masters' degrees from Penn State University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and the Ph.D. degree from the University of Michigan. Mr. Osburn is a member of the board of directors of the Association of Research Libraries, whose Committee on Collection Development he chairs, and the Research Libraries Advisory Council of OCLC. His publications are primarily in the areas of collection development and scholarly communication.

DAVID V. WARD is Associate Professor of Philosophy at Widener University. He has published on a variety of philosophical issues concerning the information professions, especially on ethical issues in the use of expert systems and other information technology. Professor Ward has been a frequent presenter at ASIS meetings, at meetings of the Instrument Society of America/Robotics and Expert Systems Division.

DAVID WEISSBORD is Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Williams College, Williamstown, Massachusetts. Professor Weissbord has most recently published "Categorical Analysis and the Logical Grammar of the Mind" in a volume of essays he edited entitled Mind, Value, and Culture: Essays in Honor of E. M. Adams (Ridgeview Press, Altascadero, CA, 1989). During the summer of 1991, he will do research on ethical issues in medicine. His main research interests include justifications in liberal political philosophy offered in response to communitarian critics.

PATRICK WILSON is Professor and Acting Dean in the School of Library and Information Studies, University of California at Berkeley. He was Dean of the school from 1970-75. Among his publications are Public Knowledge, Private Ignorance: Toward a Library and Information Policy (Greenwood Press, 1977), and Second-Hand Knowledge: An Inquiry into Cognitive Authority (Greenwood Press, 1983).

This Page Intentionally Left Blank