PREFACE

To the Alumni of the University of Illinois. Greeting:

When six years ago I wrote a word of greeting to you in the preface to the second edition of the Alumni Record, no one could have anticipated that the University of Illinois would soon be put to such a severe test.

The Great War has come and gone, and every son and daughter of Illinois may well be proud of the glorious record made by their Alma Mater in this time of storm and stress. The history of the University during this period is contained in the records of its graduates and faculties as set forth in the subsequent pages of this book. It not only needs no apologies or defense, but it is a history in which very citizen of the State, whether alumnus of the University or not, may properly take an honest pride.

It will be remembered that the great war Governor of Illinois, Honorable Richards Yates, in a letter read at the opening exercises of the University more than fifty years ago wrote:

“My great hope is that this institution shall prove the crowning achievement of this age among all the grand works in behalf of popular education, which illustrates the splendid history of our state and that to the latest generation our young men shall have to bless the wise fore-thought of the men of this age, who have, amidst gigantic war, not only vindicated the free institutions and ideas of self-government, but also founded this splendid nursery of free men and enlightened patriotism. An educated man may become unpatriotic, a patriot may become perverted through ignorance, but wisdom and patriotism hand in hand are invincible.”

This wish uttered at the very beginning of the University was a splendid prophecy which has been splendidly fulfilled.

We are entering now a new era of human history. The demands to be made upon the University will be many, some of them of an entirely new character. To meet them properly will call for a new type of professor and trustee and alumnus, men and women not merely of good training and with the culture of the past, but above all, men and women of vision and outlook. Our children and our children’s children will not rest content with having stretched out over them the dead hand of the past.

The University must lead in all the paths of progress if it is to win and maintain that position of influence in our future development which we university people think should belong to it. At the same time, it is doubly necessary in this era of changing standards that all that is good and true and beautiful in the past should be preserved and made the permanent heritage of our successors. In this work of conservation the University is by its very nature peculiarly fitted to play a permanent and even a decisive part.

The people of Illinois have made liberal appropriations for the support of this institution, and they will make still more liberal appropriations in the years to come. No matter how liberal they may be, we shall still lack many things to make a first-rate modern center of life and light such as a university ought to be. Many of these desiderata can in my opinion only be realized by the efforts of the alumni themselves. The full development of the finer sides of academic life, all that is included for instance under the term “the fine arts,” has waited patiently for fifty years, and from present indications must wait still some time longer, for that awakening in the breasts of our alumni of a strong determination that no institution shall be allowed to surpass their Alma Mater in these fundamentals of life, an awakening which I am sure is destined soon to come. A picture, a statue, a book, a specimen, a collection, a building, here a little, there a little, line upon line, precept upon precept—thus an institution grows and becomes an ever mightier force for all that is good and true and beautiful in human society, and every alumnus should feel that somewhere in that process he has himself exercised a personal influence in this steady uplift, has contributed at least one brick to this mighty and ever growing structure.

"Come over into Macedonia and help us." We are trying to build here a center in which your young people and those of all the State and the whole country will find an atmosphere which is favorable to the development during the years of college and university life of all those qualities we would wish to see in our children and fellow citizens.

Your personal presence as often as you can come to our university celebrations, your kind word of appreciation to your neighbors and friends of our work, of the opportunities offered here to young people seeking an education, your direction of the attention of your acquaintances and friends to the opportunity to do the people of the Commonwealth a service by placing funds at the disposal of the University for the ends for which it exists—all these things will help. Even the smallest efforts in this direction put forth by as large a body as our alumni now constitutes count for far more than any one can easily appreciate, who has not made it the subject of special study.

Illinois! May she do her duty in the future far better than in the past, and may every alumnus help her measure herself up to her true greatness as never before!

EDMUND J. JAMES.
HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

There is something impressively significant in the fact that all the plans for celebrating the fiftieth birthday of the University of Illinois were swept away in the rush of her sons and daughters to the support of the United States in the Great War. More than five thousand of them turned from the business of peace to whatever their country found most useful for them to do; three score more than a hundred, as many as entered the University in the first year of its career, have given up their lives in the National cause. The University's classrooms were devoted to the teaching of soldiers, its laboratories were utilized to supply the new and pressing needs of warfare; its specialists in history and engineering, in science, language and economics turned from the service of the State to the service of the Nation. In that transformation of what had come to seem in the minds of most men a State institution into an instrument of National service there was but a returning, as if, in a sense, to celebrate the closing of a great half-century of achievement, to that character which the institution had at its beginning, and in is very conception.

The founders of the nation had far sighted appreciation of the importance of education, even of higher education, in a democracy, and, although the state universities of today can not trace their origin to so remote a source, national support of institutions of higher learning in all the states to be formed in the Northwestern Territory was provided in the ordinance of 1787, and encouraged by subsequent legislation. The states were not ready to profit from the earlier gifts, but from that remote time to the present, the national government has furnished the means for initiating every great movement for higher education at public expense. The ordinance of 1787 gave Illinois two townships to be "exclusively bestowed upon a college or university," and to that gift there was added later one-half percent of the proceeds from the sale of government lands in Illinois after 1818.

Neighboring states, younger than Illinois, earlier took advantage of their gifts and established colleges. In this state the two townships were sold at ridiculously low prices and the proceeds, together with the "college fund" derived from the sale of public lands, were lent to the counties and by them used to support the common schools, the funds of which had been wasted. Funds thus in use were not easily regained. While this was going on, several sectarian colleges sprang up, and in their struggle for life naturally opposed any movement to establish a rival having state support. From the beginning there had been in Illinois general indifference, towards higher education, and not a little distrust of its institutions. All these causes in combination made futile such feeble attempts as arose to recover the seminary and college funds and apply them to their proper uses.

The only movement towards higher education in Illinois prior to 1850 that had any prompt results was that for normal schools for the training of teachers. Such a school was established by an act of the legislature in 1857, and to it so much of the funds for higher education as could be recovered was applied. Not a cent of these resources ever went to support the state university.

Contemporaneously with the agitation for normal schools there was active about the country a demand for some form of industrial education for the masses. This widespread stir was given definite motion and aim by Jonathan Baldwin Turner, in Illinois, and this state, therefore, which had squandered or perverted its first patrimony, led the way to a second, larger, and more fruitful national gift for higher education. The concrete movement which was to result in the so-called Morrill Land Grant Act and establish the University of Illinois and her sister state universities began at a meeting held at Granville, Putnam County, Illinois, on November

1 The writer wishes to acknowledge his indebtedness to the History of the University by Allan Nevins, published by the Oxford University Press, the one volume of the Semi-Centennial History of the University by B. E. Powell, and the historical sketches in the edition of the Alumni Record published in 1913 and the Directory of Matriculants published in 1916. He is also under obligations to many alumni who have generously supplied accounts of life at the University in their day.
18, 1851, at which, by invitation of an agricultural society known as the Buel Institute, organized by Benjamin Lundy, and including in its membership two brothers of William Cullen Bryant and other prominent citizens, farmers from various parts of the state and in considerable numbers met to promote agricultural education. Turner had for twenty years been considering the educational needs of the industrial workers, and his address on this occasion embodied his mature thought carefully worked out in detail. It was based on his fundamental idea that the industrial classes needed a system of liberal education for their own class, and adapted to their needs and purposes of them as their general educational wants and their vocational wants, to train teachers and lecturers for subordinate institutes, of which there was to be one in each county in the state. So clearly had he seen and understood the need and the means to meet it that now, after the land grant colleges have been in operation for fifty years, his address sounds like a description of a thing accomplished, rather than a project then looked upon as a radical innovation.

Turner's address aroused enthusiastic approval; resolutions were passed and steps were taken to circulate his plan in periodicals and pamphlets and to send forth lecturers to spread the idea. It was taken up by Greeley and other journalists and given circulation all over the country. At a second convention at Springfield in June, 1852, a federal land grant was again demanded, and the plan for a university was enlarged to include a normal school and so to claim the seminary fund. It urged that a beginning be made at once, "if possible on a sufficiently extensive scale to honorably justify a successful appeal to congress in conjunction with eminent citizens and statesmen in other states who have expressed their readiness to cooperate with us for an appropriation of public lands in each state in the Union for the appropriate endowment for the liberal education of the industrial classes in their several pursuits in each state in the Union." In November, at a third convention held in Chicago, an Industrial League was formed to disseminate the idea, and Turner was made director. Another memorial was prepared, and arrangements were made to petition the legislature and congress. A fourth convention held in Springfield in January, 1854, demanded an industrial university and urged the legislature to ask that congress appropriate to each state $500,000 worth of public lands for the liberal endowment of an industrial university. Governor Matteson proposed the subject to the legislature for discussion at its special session in that year. A fifth convention was held in Springfield in January, 1855, when a bill was prepared to incorporate the Trustees of the Illinois University, which was to receive the college and seminary funds.

Interest in the plan was widespread, but it met little favor in congress, where it was understood that President Pierce was unfriendly. Illinois representatives were alive to the demands of their constituents, and were genuinely interested in Turner's far-sighted plan, but they made little or no headway. In 1857, however, the time seemed promising, and on the advice of Senator Trumbull, Turner and his associates selected an eastern man to introduce their bill. Their choice fell on Morrill of Vermont, and to him Turner sent all his papers and documents. Internal evidence in the wording of the bill, correspondence of men intimately connected with the movement at the time, including Morrill himself, and the testimony of Turner and his associates all go to show that the Morrill Land Grant bill, which was introduced in congress on December 14, 1857, was inspired by Turner, and in part composed in his language. The bill finally passed in 1859, only to be vetoed by President Buchanan. Lincoln in the summer of 1860 promised Turner that if elected "I will sign your bill for State Universities." Morrill reintroduced it in December, but it was adversely reported by committee; virtually the same bill was again introduced by Senator Benjamin F. Wade in May, 1862, was passed by both houses, and signed by President Lincoln on July 2, 1862. Illinois had in part made restitution for the neglect shown her earlier opportunities. In the words of President Edmund J. James, "To Jonathan B. Turner, the Illinois professor and farmer, belongs the credit of having first formulated clearly the plan of a national grant of land to each state in the Union for the promotion of education in agriculture and mechanic arts, and of having inaugurated the agitation that made possible the passage of the so-called Morrill Act."

The Act appropriated thirty thousand acres of land for each member of congress and required that the grant must be accepted by the state within two years. The grant was to constitute a perpetual fund, the income of which was to be "invioably appropriated" by the state "to the endowment, support, and maintenance of, at least, one college, where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the legislatures of the states may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.”

The acceptance of the grant by the legislature in February, 1863, marked merely the beginning of the fight for a state university in Illinois. Even before the gift was accepted men interested in the sectarian colleges of the state had laid their plans to divide the proceeds of the grant between Shurtleff and Knox Colleges. Certain Chicagoans believed that the fund should be divided between an agricultural college in a farming district and a mechanical college in Chicago. To all division of the fund and to all proposals seeking to combine the new institution with those already existing, Turner and his associates were unalterably opposed. “We wish now wisely to begin a peculiar university,” he said, “which our posterity can erect into the strongest, broadest and best university on the face of the earth—Our institution is wholly new.” Turner and his associates had their way; the fund was not divided, and was given to no existing college. But the act providing for a commission to locate the university provoked another fight as bitter as any that preceded it, and almost made Turner despair of his plan.

In accordance with an act of the legislature passed in 1867, any county, city, township, or incorporated town could vote bonds to support a proposal for the location of the new institution, and there ensued a somewhat disgraceful struggle for what was looked upon as a rich prize. Chicago, Springfield, Peoria, Bloomington, Lincoln, and Jacksonville competed with Champaign county for the new “school.” By means not altogether creditable, a group of men under the leadership of Clark Robinson Griggs secured the institution for Champaign county. The tone of the whole contest, and the methods of Griggs in particular, while perhaps not open to charges of dishonesty, were such as to dishearten the earnest friends of the new undertaking, who saw their darling project at its very beginning made the booty in a statewide campaign of political trickery, swapping, and jobbery, conducted by men who cared little and understood less about the meaning of the institution for which they were struggling. Turner’s daughter reported that “rightly or wrongly he believed that the university had been placed in the hands of those who wished to use it only for their own selfish purposes, with no consideration for the great blessing it was intended to be, or appreciation of the thought and labor bestowed upon its conception and birth.”

“The two utterly dissimilar groups of men had now done their work for the industrial university,” says B. E. Powell, in his Semi-Centennial History of the University. “The first, with Jonathan B. Turner at the head had fought valiantly and intelligently for an idea; the second, with Clark R. Griggs at the head, had fought dauntlessly and shrewdly for a political plum. The Turner group felt when the university fell into the hands of the Griggs group which secured its location, that its work had been lost, that the fund which would have meant so much for the education of the industrial classes would be dissipated.

The act incorporating the Illinois Industrial University approved by Governor Oglesby on February 28th, 1867, provided that five trustees were to be appointed from each of the three grand judicial districts of the state, and one from each of the thirteen congressional districts, who with the governor, superintendent of public instruction, president of the state agricultural society, and the regent, when elected, as ex officio members, should constitute the board of trustees. The board met for the first time in Springfield on March 12, 1867.

The first duty of the trustees was to choose a president, who was to be called “regent” and thus insulated from reactionary contact with the classics, philosophy, and theology. Their choice promptly fell upon John Milton Gregory, then president of Kalamazoo College. Born in New York state, Gregory had been educated at Union College, had studied law, had been in the Baptist ministry for several years, had been head of a classical school in Detroit, editor of the Michigan Journal of Education, which he established, and for three terms had been state superintendent of public instruction in Michigan.

If the organized agriculturists of the state had been alienated by the group that took the university to Champaign county, they were still actively intent on their purpose, and were greatly displeased by the choice of a doctor of divinity as regent. They feared again that their hope of a new kind of institution for the education of the industrial classes was lost; that this new thing was after all to be made no more than another classical or sectarian college, of which there were already more than enough, one which would ignore the real needs and pervert the ambitions of the sons of the prairies.
Events soon proved that these fears were without adequate foundation. Champaign county lived up to its engagements, and those who had brought the University to it did not in any way impede its development. The regent did not make a sectarian or classical college. The feeling of mistrust and suspicion on the part of the farmers and the original promoters of the University nevertheless kept the board, the regent, and the University subject for years to unsympathetic and sometimes unjustly faultfinding scrutiny. Some of the sharpest and least justified faultfinding came from within the board itself.

The regent and the board did not, indeed, plan a curriculum to meet the desires of Turner, who would have had an institution offering little or nothing else than practical courses to students of little preparation, and laying the foundation by experimenting in agricultural education as a means to spread the knowledge thus derived among farmers everywhere. Gregory combined the practical purposes too much emphasized by Turner with some provision for general education. He and those who supported his ideas saved the University from becoming a mere industrial school so limited in its purposes as to make its development into broad usefulness difficult, if not impossible. Gregory was prepared by experience to organize and direct the kind of institution the people wished this University to be. "It may be true," writes Powell, "that he had come to his task . . . with a deeper reverence for the classics than was precisely necessary for that section of the corn belt. If true it was a reverence that was susceptible of modification. But Dr. Gregory had received special training and experience for his new work, of which those who have written of him apparently have been unaware or else have ignored. From 1859 to 1865 Dr. Gregory was a member of the board of education that controlled and managed the state agricultural college of Michigan. As secretary of that board and as state superintendent he was an influential member and upon him devolved much of the labor of direction of the affairs of the college.

"Thus Dr. Gregory had already faced the problems of creating an agricultural college in a western state. The questions of the purpose of such an institution, of its finances, of its administration, of its courses of instruction, had all been thought over, discussed, and in many cases acted upon by Dr. Gregory some eight years before he was called upon to aid in organizing the Illinois Industrial University. Even Turner, with his deeper knowledge, perhaps, of agriculture and the needs of the industrial classes, had not this practical training and experience in the actual organization and development of an agricultural college."

The first curriculum contained five departments: agriculture; polytechnic, (made up of mechanical science and art, civil engineering, mining and metallurgy, and architecture and fine arts); military; chemistry and natural science; and general science and literature, including most of the curriculum of the classical colleges of the day. This course of study caused considerable excitement among the people. The idea of teaching "English Literature" and "Ancient and Modern Languages and Literatures" was widely opposed. The institution was denounced as no more than one of the "old colleges" and the question was derisively asked, "Why add, by a public grant of lands, to these old institutions, of which the people already have too many?"

Untrue and sensational tales were told and believed, greatly to the discredit of the new University. Many demanded that the classics should be excluded from the course of study; others that they should be tolerated, but not cherished. The dissatisfaction showed itself in newspaper articles and in public addresses; dissension appeared in the board of trustees; and finally, in 1870, a convention of delegates from the several county agricultural societies met at Bloomington to consider the past, present, and future condition of the Illinois Industrial University. Dr. Gregory attended and delivered an address. He explained the act creating the University and the course of study, answered some reasonable questions, and as a result very much improved the existing feeling. A committee was appointed to visit the institution; its report served to allay criticism and prejudice. But in the preceding year the legislature had appropriated sixty thousand dollars in support of the University for the biennium, and there were other signs that the new institution was to be given a chance to prove its worth.

Such an opportunity and such a result were sorely needed if the University was not to prove a failure, for in spite of the efforts made to recruit students, and the general interest aroused throughout the state, only fifty students enrolled on Monday, March 2, 1868, when the doors of the new institution were first opened. The number reached sixty-eight by the end of the first week, but most of these were from Champaign county.
Formal inaugural ceremonies were held in the chapel on March 11, in the presence of visitors from all parts of the state; addresses were made by Newton Bateman, state superintendent of public instruction, and Dr. Gregory, and music was furnished under the direction of a well known Chicago musician. Two days later the first faculty meeting was held, and the University was considered a going concern. The minutes of the first meeting show the size of the beginnings: “A meeting of the Faculty of the Illinois Industrial University was held this evening in the room of the Regent—present, the Regent (Dr. Gregory), Prof. Baker and Prof. Atherton.” Jonathan Periam was head farmer.

To this brief list was soon added the name of Thomas Jonathan Burrill, and a little later A. P. S. Stuart, Willard F. Bliss, Samuel W. Shattuck, Edward Snyder, and a few non-resident lecturers completed the faculty. The students whom they had to teach were mostly from the farm, and but indifferently prepared. Though the admission requirements were made as strict as those of the best universities of the time, those who could not meet them, but who could pass an examination in the common school branches, were admitted to “select” courses. The routine of college life was largely determined in the beginning by the requirement that all students should work two hours a day at manual labor, should attend military drill on two or three afternoons a week, and, with the beginning of the fall term of 1868, should wear uniforms. Its environment at first was centered in the old seminary building, which served as dormitory as well as recitation hall, “a large, plain, red brick, five story building, set down flat in the black Illinois mud, with not a tree or a shrub, a spear of grass or a fence. It was as desolate a place as possible to imagine” wrote Mrs. F. Adelia Potter Reynolds, one of the first alumnae. But “there were great changes in the first few months. Fences were built. Trees and shrubs were set out. Grass was sown, and refreshing green took the place of the mud. Gravel walks were laid out, and made it possible to step without sinking shoe deep in the mud.”

Nearly all the students were poor, and they lived in the simplest manner possible. Some got their own meals. John A. Ockerson says that a “carefully kept account of food expenses shows an average monthly cost of $4.10 during one college year,” and C. W. Rolfe says that average was a bit high. Much of the money thus laid out was earned by labor for the University at fifteen cents an hour.

The social experience of the students was not greater than their educational or financial equipment, and the regent and his colleagues used many devices to bring about something more than merely industrial improvement. “The students... were full to overflowing with physical vigor,” says C. W. Rolfe, “and as a consequence, while there was very little that could be called mean-spirited in their fun, there was a good deal of roughness and horseplay... The admission of girls to the University at the beginning of the third year had a tendency to modify this roughness to a considerable degree,” but for a good many years there were traces of pleasantries not quite congenial “to those who were not accustomed to life on a western farm.”

Dr. Gregory had a gift for speaking that enabled him to supplement the influence of class work with a series of chapel talks which impressed the youths of that day to an extent hard, if not impossible, now to realize. “Every University of Illinois student of the ’60s will tell you” wrote Ockerson, “of Dr. Gregory’s morning chapel talks, those earnest, kindly appeals with their almost personal challenge to each one of us.” He organized two literary societies and assigned every student to one or the other by reading the roll in chapel with the statement that the even-numbered students were assigned to Philomathean and the odd-numbered to Adelphic. Whereupon the societies began to develop widely different characteristics and aims, to meet in intense rivalry, and to be, for a quarter of a century, the most potent influence in the social life of the students.

In this environment, and because of it, Dr. Gregory gave a lecture on sculpture which stirred such enthusiasm that more than three thousand dollars were subscribed for an art collection, with which the regent went to Europe and brought back a collection of casts, lithographs, engravings, and photographs unsurpassed at that time in the West, either in number or in value. Even the vision of Dr. Gregory could hardly have foreseen that the young Lorado Taft, helping to restore the casts shattered in transit, would have found there the first inspiration for his great career as a sculptor.

Perhaps the most prominent feature of student life was the student government, introduced in 1870 and for several years a useful bit of machinery. Those who lived under it in its earliest years seem to have carried pleasant recollections of it; later students thought it should have been abolished sooner than it was. Amanda Campbell Moore has written, "The Student Government was one source of enjoyment, and, possibly, improvement. We surely had good times, and stormy times; no one of us then imagined that when J. R. Mann was perspiring so freely in debate he was getting his preparation as leader in congress."

Drill in parliamentary usage was one of the purposes of the government; but it meant also to enforce order on the campus and for a time it succeeded, occasionally assessing fines for small offences. There were more important cases, however, the most noted one having come up in January 1872. It is thus recorded by Allan Nevins in his history of the University: "Some terms previously the first fraternity, a chapter of Delta Tau Delta, had been secretly started at the University; and its members had gained control of the college government, and resolved to measure their strength with the faculty. They found an excuse when in Gregory's absence the acting regent instructed the student choir to practice in hours sacred to study; and hauling the choir into court, summarily fined its members and ordered them not to repeat the offense. The choir appealed to the faculty, and was supported by Gregory upon his return, receiving instructions to pay no attention to the government. Hereupon the wrathful officers called a general student assembly, and carried through it resolutions threatening to disband the government unless its action was sustained; and as the faculty refused this support, another assembly four days later announced that the government was automatically at an end unless the Regent retired from his position. The whole was a piece of parliamentary fencing in which the students took a jesting delight, but it had features that were distinctly alarming to Dr. Gregory. He was on the point of leaving for the East to deliver a lecture before some educational association on the merits and success of the college government system, and he saw himself in a painfully false position. At once, therefore, he had another student assembly called, before which both he and Judge Cunningham appeared, and at which the latter was asked to deliver a judicial opinion. He decided that the Government was in the right, the faculty paid the choir's fines, and Gregory departed eastward with an easy heart." "I well remember," says J. E. Armstrong, who knew the system in its last days, before its end in 1883, "how all we got out and hustled for our candidates and even fought for them with fists if necessary and resorted to all the tricks known to the civilized and to the uncivilized world. Lessons at such times had no attractions for us, and the faculty acquiesced. The sense of our responsibility for the entire management of the University grew upon us until it included the management of the president himself, and upon one occasion when the court thought he had not acted wisely it summoned him for trial for neglect of duty. He then dissolved the government."

Other organizations came into existence in the early years, some of which are still active. Alethenai was formed in 1871; in the same year the University band furnished music for commencement, as it has done every year since; in November of that year there appeared the first number of a monthly periodical, called The Student, changed two years later to The Illini and continued without interruption until the present. It was heavy, learned, serious; wholly unlike the college daily or the college magazine of today, it reflected the conditions as they were then. Members of the faculty contributed considerably to both the learning and the heaviness of its pages. The Y. M. C. A. was organized in 1874, and in that year also the Agricultural society and the Telegraphic association became the pioneers in a policy which before many years provided a society for each important held covered by the curriculum. Throughout the first decade, and for some years afterward, the University was much like a large family. The students all knew each other, and knew the faculty. "The tie between students and faculty was strong," says Emma Jones Spence, "almost like that of relatives. We exchanged photographs, autographs, Christmas and New Year's cards, sent flowers to each other in cases of illness or death, gave our professors presents on their various anniversaries, entertained them in our homes—those who had homes—and were often entertained by them, either by classes or in other groups."

The influence of a few men of this period was great and lasting. Besides Gregory, there were Burrill, whose service in mere years ran from 1868 until 1912, and varied from that of little better than manual laborer to that of the acting president; Shattuck, long a teacher of military and mathematics and financial agent, whose strength of personality made him a power not always suspected by those whom it most influenced; Snyder, most beloved, perhaps, of all; and Ricker, first of the alumni to find a permanent place on the faculty and still a familiar figure on the campus. These men and their colleagues entered into the hard task of forming the new institution with a seriousness and self-sacrificing zeal almost religious in fervor of faith. They were men with a vision of a great idea, impossible of fulfilment in their day, but possible at any time only through the kind of vital gifts they were willing to bestow upon it, and a willingness to await the slow processes of time.

After thirteen years, in which the foundation was finally laid, but in which the University had grown very slowly as to attendance and financial support from the state, Gregory resigned, and his services ended with commencement of 1880. His successor was Selim Hobart Peabody, who had declined the professorship of mechanical science and engineering in 1868 and after serving elsewhere had become professor of mechanical engineering and physics in 1878. He served until 1891. Almost all of his adult life, at the time of his election to the regency, had been spent in teaching and accompanying activities. It is said that at the time of his appointment he could have taught successfully any subject offered in the curriculum of the institution.

Although his conception of the function of the University was not materially different from that of Gregory, the service he could and did render was quite so. Gregory was intent upon laying broad foundations; he had little patience with the details of administration, and it was fortunate for the institution that this was so. His gifts were of the kind most needed in the beginning. No less opportune were those of the cultivated and forward-looking educator and at the same time pains-taking and methodical organizer that Peabody proved to be.

Peabody systematized administrative affairs and gathered up loose ends everywhere. He personally attended to numerous details. Dr. Burrill, in writing of his work, said that "throughout his administration he had no stenographer. The University did not own during his time a typewriting machine; official correspondence was mainly conducted in his own hand writing. There was no registrar. At the beginning of each term he personally issued class permits and at the close recorded class grades. Aside from his service as head of the department of mechanical engineering and physics, he taught classes, during different terms, in mechanics, hydraulics and mental science, the latter subject being required of all seniors. It is little wonder that there was not much time for effective campaigning outside or for dreaming of future greatness."

But in spite of many obstacles, material and educational, progress was made during this administration. In 1879-80 there were 434 students (reduced in 1880-81 to 379), and 26 teachers of all grades, of whom 15 were of professorial rank; in 1880-81, there were 519 students and 40 instructors, 24 of whom were of professorial rank. For the first named year the total income from all sources was about $60,650; for the last named, $124,600. The total legislative appropriation for the session of 1879 was $25,500; that for the session of 1881 was $147,200. This latter figure included $70,000 for the Natural History building, but excluding this, the increase was noteworthy.

Before President Peabody's administration, all state appropriations had been clearly for specified purposes and exclusive of salaries for instruction. At the legislative session of 1881, the trustees, spurred on by Peabody, resolved to ask, in addition to the usual sums, for an appropriation for the current expenses of instruction. The legislature granted the sum of $11,400 to help cover the loss suffered by the University because of the reduction in the interest on its investments. The next legislature was asked for $14,000, for the same purpose, and the grant was made. During the biennial periods which followed, the sums, of $24,000, $32,000, and $40,000 were allowed, respectively.

This increase was obtained only through persistent effort to move a penurious legislature. In that effort both the faculty and the alumni aided the president. In 1888 a committee of the Chicago Alumni club considered means for obtaining more generous support from the legislature, and for interesting public-spirited citizens of wealth in making gifts to the University. Neither idea was carried through by the alumni. As Nevins points out, the turning point in the University finances came less through state than through federal appropriations, carried by the Hatch Act of 1887 for agricultural experiment stations, and the supplementary act of 1890. Peabody was prominent and active in the movement which brought this aid about, and prompt in taking measures to keep the legislature from diminishing its support as the federal assistance became available.

There was during Peabody's administration a considerable growth in the number of the faculty, and a distinct improvement in the quality of work done and in the standing which the institution had throughout the state. The fifteen professors and six assistants or instructors of 1881 had increased to twenty-five professors and fifteen subordinates ten years later. Burrill had for some years been doing notable work in botany and bacteriology. In 1884 the courses in science were strengthened and the prestige of the University was raised by the bringing of Professor S. A. Forbes from the Normal University. He was state entomologist and director of the state laboratory of natural history, which he had founded in 1879, and these offices he brought to the University. As Robinson had in the preceding decade offered the first shop practice ever introduced in an engineering course, so Forbes was probably the first man in Illinois to use the type method in laboratory instruction in zoology, which he had begun before Huxley's Laboratory Guide appeared and revolutionized the teaching of zoology. Though Peabody's influence was directed more to organizing, systematizing, and expanding the curriculum, than to scholarly endeavor, the progressive alertness to modern educational aims and methods on the part of the faculty that had characterized the earlier years, continued, and began to be more widely known and appreciated.

Dr. Peabody encountered some annoyances and difficulties during his regime arising from the attitude of the students. In the beginning, many assumed an unfriendly attitude toward the new regent. The seniors were said to have held a meeting to decide whether they would return or not. A controversy between secret fraternities and the court of the students' government arose early in his term. As a result, the regent recommended, and the trustees approved, a ruling that no student could enter the University until he had pledged himself not to join a fraternity, and that no student should be graduated until he had certified that he had not belonged to any fraternity while in the University. The adoption of these rules disclosed the existence of four such organizations. Their members petitioned the faculty to repeal the rules, but the faculty only turned their petition over to the Board, which recommended that their requests be refused. The rule was not repealed until September, 1891, after Peabody had left. From the time of the passage of the rule, more or less antagonism existed, directed chiefly toward the regent, whose duty is was to execute the mandate.

Another occurrence, trivial in itself, also inflicted no little injury. One of the cadet captains in the military organization failed to receive an examination grade sufficient to permit him to continue in his official position. His brother officers undertook to compel his reinstatement by resigning en masse. All but two were persuaded by the faculty to withdraw their resignations, and those two were dismissed. Whereupon, a great and general protest arose, and the students were allowed to take their grievances to the trustees, who sat as a sort of high court, and in effect, put the faculty upon trial. The trustees reinstated the two officers. The one whose case began the trouble had already resumed his work. The students virtually won, and the regent was left in a somewhat uncomfortable position.

Student life was rapidly growing in complexity. Many new societies were formed during the decade—natural history, agricultural, civil and mechanical engineering, and architectural societies, and others; the Y. M. C. A. became active. Athletics, hitherto unorganized and almost wholly neglected by the authorities, began to assume something of its modern aspect with the formation of the athletic association at the beginning of the decade. The first intercollegiate baseball game took place between Illinois and Illinois College in the autumn of 1886; the first football team to represent the University went to Purdue in 1890. The Illini underwent one of its many reorganizations, and in March of 1882 the first class annual, the Sophograph, forerunner of the Illio, was issued by the sophomores. Oratorical contests were still more numerous and important than athletic games, though even by the middle of the decade there were complaints that the literary societies were not literary. Whatever their shortcomings, they had been left, by the dissolution of the student government in 1883 the most influential undergraduate organizations, the centers of political, as well as of social, activity.

"Perhaps the most characteristic thing about student life in my time," wrote Mary Tracy Earle Horne, '85, "was its lack of organization and its lack of social life, except that which centered in the three literary societies. Somehow a series of lectures and concerts—good ones—was provided every year, but the dances, the plays, the "jinks" of various kinds of today did not exist. We had the junior exhibition and the oratorical contests. A slight scholastic flavor was supposed to characterize our relaxations. There was complete absence of chaperones in my day. We should have been offended if anyone had suggested one as necessary. I do not say that our guileless, informal oyster stews after a skating party were wise, yet no harm came of them except the general lack of savoir faire with which we took our places afterwards in a world which continually grows more complex."

"To speak of student activities," one learns from Glenn Hobbs, '91, whose point of view is that of most of the students of his time, "means to speak almost exclusively of University Hall. We knew no other place and in fact there was no other."
We attended class there and only there. We marched to chapel every day to the sounds of martial music not bad enough to cause the banishment of the musicians. With the faculty on the platform, Maud Kimball 'at the piano' a quartet choir to sing, and an occasional senior to speak, these chapel exercises were formal and impressive ceremonies. This same chapel witnessed events of varying importance from class meetings to junior exhibitions."

One leading entertainment of the year was furnished by the freshman class in its attempts to hold a "sociable", which it was the business of all other classes to prevent or break up. Great secrecy was attempted; the party was often held out of town, sometimes in Decatur, or Bloomington, but few were unmolested. "All kinds of heathenish practices were used to break up the affairs," says C. A. Kiler, '02, including eyewater and other irritants, before the day of gas masks, "and the results were usually satisfactory," Mr. Kiler remarks, somewhat ambiguously. For the seniors the momentous event of the year was their appearance in "plug" hats and long coats, in which they tried to be dignified, with results that were not usually considered satisfactory.

The alumni were becoming active, and were making themselves felt out of all proportion to their numbers. The alumni association had been formed as soon as there were graduates to form it, and the annual meetings had begun in 1873. For ten years little was done except to have an annual dinner and elect officers, and, beginning in 1875, to hold a public literary meeting at commencement time. Early in 1884 the alumni through a committee began a campaign to have the name of the University changed, and in a little more than a year succeeded. They also vigorously pushed through a plan to make the trustees of the University elective, instead of appointive. In this move they were opposed, but not deterred, by the regent. Having got the law enacted, they promptly took steps to get alumni on the board, and by the end of the decade a third of the elective membership were graduates, a proportion that has remained fairly stable ever since. As if to show that its aims were not wholly political, the Association gave the University a grand piano at commencement time in 1887.

Matters of discipline, disturbances in the cadet battalion, a radical change in the personnel of the board, these and other circumstances led the regent to offer his resignation in June. It was at once accepted, and he left to become director of the liberal arts exhibit at the Columbian exposition.

When Peabody resigned and left behind him among students and alumni a less friendly feeling than has since been accorded his memory, and less, no doubt, than he deserved, the trustees put a man in charge temporarily who on three earlier occasions had acted for brief periods as regent, Dr. Thomas Jonathan Burrill. The atmosphere cleared at once; everyone liked and respected him, students, faculty, and alumni; he had been connected with the University in a variety of positions from the earliest days and knew all its problems; he was well and favorably known throughout the state.

In the three years while Burrill acted as regent the University made substantial advances in several ways. Virtually acting as chairman of the faculty rather than as regent, he soon made a vigorous demand for better support from the legislature. He had no patience with the timid practice of asking for only as much as might be obtained without a struggle, and demanded that the trustees should ask for what the University needed and put where it belonged any failure to supply the need. Cautious friends were appalled when the trustees requested an appropriation of $551,500 from a Democratic administration committed to a program of economy. Fortunately Henry M. Dunlap, '75, newly elected to the senate, was in a strategic position, and Governor Altgeld was distinctly friendly. After overcoming great opposition, the University obtained an appropriation of $295,700 or more than twice as much as it had ever received before.

One immediate result of this was an increase in salaries, coupled almost at once with the opening of new departments and the engaging of a group of new members of the faculty who have been largely instrumental in shaping the course of the University since that time—Kinley, Clark, Greene, Townsend, Breckenridge, Daniels, Dodge, and White. This group has been jocularly called the "wheel-horses of the early nineties", and wheel-horses they have been, all but one of them still in the University and still pulling vigorously, with an influence upon the destiny of the institution unrivalled by that of any group except the founders.

The system of rigidly prescribed courses solidified under Peabody was swept away and practically the present elective system was introduced. A. N. Talbot was placed in charge of a new department of municipal and sanitary engineering; departments of architectural engineering, and electrical engineering were created, and reorganization of other departments, especially the languages and pedagogy, took place. An agricultural short course was instituted; a biological station on the Illinois river near Havana was provided; a summer session was begun. One of the first of Burrill's acts as regent was to institute plans for developing graduate study. The first fellowships were offered in 1892; in the next year the graduate school was reorganized under a committee consisting of the regent and the deans of the colleges; and in the year following plans were made for providing work leading to the doctorate.

Although the natural history building had been provided for under Peabody, it was not completed until 1892, in the fall of which year work was begun on the engineering building, for which $160,000 had been provided in the large appropriation secured through Burrill's initiative. With the building of these new structures the University changed its whole aspect, and entered upon a new phase; these were the beginnings of a material growth that contrasted sharply with the past, and that has scarcely slackened since.

Student life warmed and expanded in the more genial atmosphere. Students were allowed greater freedom, and showed a better, though not always a docile, spirit. In the first month of Burrill's term the pledge not to join fraternities was abolished, and the growth of those societies was tacitly encouraged. Attendance rapidly increased, thanks in part, no doubt, to the work of Peabody and the alumni in preceding years, as well as to the confidence felt on all sides in the acting head of the University. Student organizations were stimulated. The first glee club was recruited in 1891; in the next year the band gave its first annual concert; the mandolin, art, chemistry, and other clubs found lodgment, and a system of student assemblies was begun "for social and intellectual purposes." Perhaps it is appropriate to mention as one of the most inspiring events of the time, from the point of view of the students, the change in September, 1892, by which military drill was required of freshmen and sophomores only, and of them but twice a week.

Class spirit ran high; the freshman social became a battle of wits and more tangible materials, and was conducted over a wide territory. The first class rush had occurred, quite spontaneously, in the autumn of 1891 in the corridors of University Hall. Clothing was damaged, eyewater, apparently ready for any emergency, played a part, and in spite of faculty exhortations, the fight did not end until the heaviest student, George Huff, taking refuge on a chandelier, pulled it from the ceiling and came down upon the heads of the classmen. The rush became an annual affair, and in one form or another continued so until 1918.

Athletics was given new impetus by a grant of the use of part of what is now Illinois Field, where in 1891 a grand-stand was erected and some facilities for games were provided. In that and the next year, the University defeated all the small college teams and graduated into the class of the big colleges by defeating Northwestern in baseball in the spring of 1892. The game was played at Evanston, and when the news reached Champaign a procession was formed which paraded the two towns, chanting the score of 13 to 8 and other things, and creating a precedent long, diligently, and variously observed in the years following.

The Illini, in these years of transition, became a weekly, with some of the characteristics of a newspaper, and the University subscribed for four hundred copies to be distributed among the high schools of the state. The Sophograph gave way, as the annual, to the Ilío, first issued, in 1894, by the juniors.

Though Dr. Burrill continued his active service for the University until 1912, and worked daily in his laboratory on the campus until within a week of his death in 1915, it was in these three years that he was most prominently a leader among his colleagues, and none of the alumni remember him with more affection than those who were then in college. "The class of '94 recalls with pride and affection that Dr. Burrill was made a member of the alumni association at the same time as ourselves," says Lucinda Pearl Boggs, "and that he would have been listed with our class but for the strenuous objection of the entire alumni body. It seems impossible to pay any tribute to Dr. Burrill that will accurately and worthily portray the man, the scholar, and the administrator, because he always lost sight of himself in devotion to his task. He was humble with the humility of the man who sees the greatness of his cause; he was sincere, and the purity of his motives enabled him to see into the hearts of men; he was sympathetic, with the good will that easily put him in harmony with others; he was wise, with the broadmindedness which enabled him for so many years to pursue scientific studies successfully and at the same time guide a great university into newer, higher, and better ways. Nor can one pass over the minor virtues of tact, of tolerance, and above all his saving sense of humor which made him laugh with us at our own girl and boy absurdities. And so Dr.
Burrill left his impress upon the institution, not with the brilliancy of some other administrators and scholars, perhaps, but with a permanency indispensible because of its righteousness."

There were some others who with Dr. Burrill bound the old University to the new, and a few of whom are now going on into the still newer era in the second half-century. Professors Ricker and Rolfe have both now retired, but Ira O. Baker, '74, is still a vigorous teaching member of the faculty. What architecture and the college of engineering owe to Ricker, civil engineering owes to Baker, and that is a great debt. Arthur N. Talbot, '81, became head of a department under Peabody, and has been one of the outstanding figures who have made the research work at the University known throughout the engineering world. Another bond between the two eras is S. W. Parr, '84, captain of the first baseball team, whose work in chemistry has kept pace with the expanding requirements of the newer time.

"When I came upon the Board of Trustees in 1893," wrote James E. Armstrong, '81, "there was no president. Dr. Burrill was acting in that position, while the merits of various men were being discussed, Superintendent Draper of Cleveland among them. Some admired his great executive ability but feared to choose a president who was not strictly a college-bred man. I was put upon the committee to recommend candidates for all vacancies and eventually was made chairman of that committee. I visited various doctors of divinity and philosophy, and corresponded with many people. I became convinced that what the University needed was not so much the college type as the organizer and the executive who could bring the institution to the notice of the legislature and convince the average man in politics that the state University was the greatest asset of the commonwealth. Dr. Burrill and I went to Cleveland to see Dr. Draper. We were so well impressed that we arranged to have him meet the Board in Chicago. He came, and after a half-hour's talk we asked him to retire from the room; in ten minutes he was elected. The Board had set $4,000 as the salary; he had set his price at $7,000 and free rent of a house we were to build for him. He got his price in those ten minutes."

Dr. Draper, like some of the trustees, had misgivings as to his fitness for the presidency because of his relatively slight academic training. He was a lawyer and a man of affairs, rather than a scholar. He had begun teaching school at eighteen, had established a good law practice at thirty, had subsequently served on the Albany Board of Education, in the state legislature, on the federal court of Alabama claims, as state superintendent of public instruction, in New York, and in 1892 at the age of forty-two had become superintendent of the Cleveland schools. He had been made doctor of laws by Colgate in 1889. These bare facts do not indicate, however, the character of the man, or suggest how admirably fitted he was for the task he assumed. He was, as Nevins has said, a man of culture in a very real sense, for he knew law, he was a great reader of history, and he had a rare intellectual curiosity and a knack for securing from others knowledge he had not found for himself.

Draper showed a grasp of the whole situation at once inclusive and attentive to details in all their complications, and formulated promptly a general policy which he knew how to carry out. There is always danger lest in telling the story of an institution whose life is a complex of many forces and influences too much attention and credit may be given one leading figure. The remarkable growth of the University in the decade under Draper rose largely out of the conditions developed before he came, and was promoted by many other men than he, but it must be said that his ideas and his personality were dominant throughout the decade; he shaped the destinies of the University more completely in accordance with his will than had any predecessor. And when he had done the work he could do, and saw that his part must be a lesser or a different one in the expanding institution, he withdrew.

The ground had been well prepared for the coming of Draper. The faculty had grown, was progressive, ready for vigorous leadership; the governor and the state administration generally were friendly; the people of the state were beginning to know something of the institution and to have confidence in it. Another source of help is suggested in a remark made by Dr. Burrill many years later as he stood on the steps of Ryerson Laboratory of the University of Chicago: "The people of this state will never appreciate what this institution has meant to us at the old University." At the beginning Draper expressed his conviction that the University must ask for much larger appropriations, must raise its entrance requirements, must give more attention to research, and must improve the social conditions in Champaign and Urbana as they affected the University.
The program laid out then, and followed, meant a final and irrevocable departure from the earlier idea of the University as a peculiar institution with a special mission to serve a definite purpose for a part of the people hitherto neglected in education. Much of the early ideal had already been lost; even in developing agriculture and engineering and science the University had perhaps inevitably approached the generally characteristic type of American university. It was now to go further towards the standard type by remediing the great defects and weaknesses in its work in the liberal arts, and by adding, after the fashion of the time, new schools and colleges, to offer advanced or professional training in whatever subject any citizen of the state might desire.

The first acquisition was the school of pharmacy, added in May, 1896, when the Chicago college of pharmacy was taken over. One year later the college of physicians and surgeons of Chicago became the school of medicine of the University. In the fall of 1897 a law school, long discussed, was opened. In February of 1900 it became the college of law, and the medical school was at the same time made the college of medicine. In the same year in which the law school was opened, the school of library economy which had been organized at the Armour institute of technology in 1893 was moved to the University as the state library school and the director became university librarian. There were at that time only two other library schools in the country. In 1895 the work in music was reorganized and enlarged and in 1897 still further expanded into a school of music. Three years later a school of dentistry was organized in connection with the college of medicine.

While all these additions were being made, existing departments of the University were being transformed. Dean Davenport came as head of the college of agriculture at the same time that Draper became president, and strongly supported by Burrill and others, reorganized the work in agriculture, then at low ebb, and entered on a more ambitious and aggressive program than even Draper at first approved. The success which immediately followed both in attracting students and in winning support throughout the state for the University soon won Draper's approval, though not always his belief in the direction Dean Davenport wished to give the growing department. The agricultural experiment station was also reorganized, and its work greatly enlarged. In 1899 an appropriation of $150,000 led to a complete making over of the college, and what had been the weakest department of the University soon grew to such proportions, in number of courses, of faculty, of students, and in appropriations, as to give it for years a prominent, if not a dominant place, in the University as it was regarded throughout the state.

Engineering, already strong, also grew, especially the department of electrical engineering. Railway engineering was added in 1898. The chief feature of the growth in this field however was the establishment of the engineering experiment station in 1903, the first of its kind anywhere.

Literature and the liberal arts had been neglected from the beginning, and although given considerable encouragement under Burrill, were still deplorably weak when Draper came. Science was already strong under Professor Forbes, dean, and professor of zoology, with Burrill in botany and Palmer in chemistry. Dr. David Kinley was given the task in 1894 of building up the work within the college of literature and arts, and he proceeded with vision and energy on that difficult undertaking. Under his stimulating direction, and largely as a result of his own work in the classroom, the courses in economics grew by 1902 into a group of courses of training for business, later to become the college of commerce. In English and the modern languages there was rapid growth, and a healthy quickening was perceptible in all departments. The graduate work was given impetus in 1894 by the appointment of a dean of the graduate school, and as the various departments of the University were strengthened, advanced work of wider range and better quality gradually became possible, and the number of graduate students increased. One hundred and twenty students were registered in the school in the year Draper left.

Naturally, such growth required money. At his first appearance before the legislature, Draper asked for $502,300 and the legislature appropriated $422,000, and each biennium of his presidency brought a great increase over its predecessor, reaching a total of $1,267,125 in 1903. Much of this increase was made necessary by the rapidly growing attendance and faculty, but there was at the same time, necessarily, a vigorous building program. When Draper came, there were five buildings on the campus; there were fifteen when he left. Engineering Hall was completed in the year of his inauguration. Then in rapid succession came the library, the president's house, the observatory, the heating plant, the chemistry building, the agricultural building, the gymnasium, and in 1903 an appropriation for the woman's building.
Such expansion required many readjustments in the administrative organization of the University. "Within two years," says Nevins in summarizing this matter, Draper "had given clearer definition of his own powers, upon which he was insistent; for the general supervision of the instructional work, he had created the deanship of the general faculty; and he had organized the council of administration... To the general faculty, consisting of all of professorial rank, was given charge of the instructional policy. Later the deanship of this body was dropped, and the growth of the University led in 1901 to the creation of the senate, composed of president, deans, and department heads, which took over the duties of the general faculty."

But by the great body of alumni who knew the University in that decade, the period will always be best remembered for the astonishing increase in attendance and the development of the undergraduate spirit. The changes wrought in undergraduate life in the decade following 1894 were very great. At its beginning there was still noticeable a considerably amount of crudeness, of which the treatment of the freshmen and their social endeavors was but typical. It was Draper's task to eliminate this rough rowdism and introduce with the hearty co-operation of the students many refinements of social custom without creating an artificial or a snobbish atmosphere. He did all this with consummate skill. Hazing and riotous celebrations were customary, and Draper was too good a sportsman not to take pleasure in the vigorous display of healthy animal spirits thus employed, if kept within bounds. But he was a firm disciplinarian, and when the sophomores injured a girl in breaking up a freshman party in Urbana, he set to work promptly and effectively to remove this kind of thing from student life. The process involved the expulsion of nine students and the suspension of another, and gave all clearly to understand that Draper was master of the situation; nobody ever supposed that a student uprising would drive him from the University. He won the students by frank and hearty enjoyment of their sports, by square and manly treatment, by careful and thoughtful courtesy in all his relations with them. No undergraduate ever went past him on the street without knowing that he had passed the president of the University and feeling that there was a personal meaning in the unfailing slow smile and salute. He went to all the games and knew all the athletes by name. He went out with D. H. Carnahan to plan the tennis courts north of the greenhouse; he presented the gold medal given to Way Woody who had his leg broken in football.

In athletics the days of the small college were over, and in 1896 the beginnings of what has grown into the Conference were made. Baseball came to be the leading sport, though football and minor sports were not neglected. With the growing prominence of athletics came a decline in the literary societies and in debating, which reached its lowest ebb towards the middle of the decade. On the other hand the efforts to build up the literary departments resulted in a great access of dramatic effort, plays being given in French, German, and English, and one in Greek. The fraternities had an important place in changing the spirit of undergraduate life, for General (then Captain) D. H. Brush, though a rigid disciplinarian, had the knack of winning favor for military drill, and making it popular.

Social organizations increased rapidly in numbers, in a decade the fraternities increasing from four to thirteen, and five sororities finding welcome. Dancing became a dominant social interest, and there was a noticeable attention to the formality of having chaperones at parties. "This was a period of wholesome social conditions," says H. H. Horner, "and of healthy growth of fraternities and sororities. I was a 'barb' my first year in college and a fraternity man thereafter, but I have no recollection of 'bad blood' or snobbishness as between men in and out. The relations of men and women on the campus, in the class rooms, and in social life were natural, unaffected, and remarkably free from improprieties. There was free opportunity for every student to develop and to profit by his own talents; there was good comradeship for anyone who would mix with his fellows; there was the inspiration which comes from the devotion of the crowd to a common cause; there was a high level of individual industry and purpose among the students."

The great increase in numbers had done away almost wholly with the old familiar and personal relations between the students and the members of the faculty, a relationship which to the earlier alumni is one of the most cherished memories. They met as often as ever, perhaps, at receptions, and more or less formal social occasions were numerous, and the students became increasingly able to stand on their own feet when in close social contact with their fellows. But personal relations were seldom intimate. A man who was a student through much of this period remarks that "there was not a strongly organized effort on the part of the faculty to serve the particular needs of the individual student. We were dealt with almost wholly in groups, and only here and there recognized, and then quite unofficially, as human units with characteristics, ambitions, and capacities differing from those of our fellows. I shall never forget my first registration day; how full of eager anticipation I was in the morning, how despondent as the day wore on with no word of welcome and no intimation that I was more than a peg to fill a hole that was somewhere empty. I did come at last in that long and disagreeable day to a man who actually put down his pen and greeted me; seemed not to be in a hurry; asked me where I came from, what I expected to do, and expressed the hope that I would find his course interesting. He simply allowed himself to be guided by his natural human impulses. The man was Harry Sands Grindley. I remember just where I found him, his cordial smile, his friendly handshake, his linen coat. I shall always love him for that little display of human kindness in my day of greatest need. It is hardly necessary to say that I did not run into "I. A." on registration day. There was no lack of kindly human instincts on the part of the faculty, as I was later happily to discover, but there was to my mind a lamentable failure to capitalize the natural instincts of the teaching staff and to make concerted effort to discover the individual back of the name and to help that individual to make the most of his new opportunity.

So much of this individual experience is cited here because it typifies a condition that came in this decade to be general, and has remained so. The condition is in large part the inevitable consequence of a numerous enrollment; it is also in no small measure the token of an opportunity lost, an inarticulate but real and poignant appeal ignored by the faculty.

The administrative officers saw in the growing loss of personal contact with the students, who shared the attention of the faculty with so many other proper and pressing interests, the need of some organized system of contact. To supply this need for the young women, whose lot at the university had always been a rather hard one, owing to lack of resources rather than of sympathy on the part of the officers, especially since the beginning of Dr. Burrill's regime, a woman's department was created in 1897, the head of which was to be adviser, disciplinarian, and protector of all women students. Miss Violet D. Jayne came to fill the office, giving part of her time to the teaching of courses in English, and in a position notoriously difficult at best, she became a pleasing and immensely helpful influence in both the scholastic and the social life of the women.

The effort to meet this requirement for the men led to a signal innovation in the establishing, in 1901, of the office of dean of men, first called dean of undergraduates, and Thomas Arkle Clark, for whom and by whom, inextricably, the place was made, became the first college officer to hold such a position or title. It was his business, in the beginning, to serve in the place traditionally held by the president in relation to the students, as adviser, friend, and disciplinarian, for all of which duties Professor Clark was eminently fitted. The opportunities and activities of the office had hardly been suspected when it was created; the place has grown in utility and importance ever since, until it is now the one office most intimately connected with undergraduate life. Though not clearly perceived at its beginning, this innovation meant the establishing of a relationship between administration and students considerably at variance with that maintained at many universities. Through it the University keeps account of class attendance, class standing, health, living conditions, social activities, and a thousand and one items of more or less individual concern which are in many places ignored as outside the responsibility of the university. Much as is accomplished by the organized efforts of the office working through clubs and fraternities, still more effect results from the personal contact of the dean of men, as he is now called, with thousands of students. He knows thousands of them by name; he visits every man who goes to the hospital; he is seldom missing from the deathbed of a student; he attends hundreds of parties and meetings and dinners and makes hundreds of talks each year; he is the friend and counsellor of the great mass of students; he is also the disciplinary officer who gives many a man a bad half-hour. Naturally some of them think they are too closely attended by this system of oversight; but the good that has come of it is immeasurable, and if not recognized before a man leaves college is in almost all cases admitted afterwards.

The alumni did not make themselves much felt during the Draper administration. That man did not force them into the thing, which Draper did not conceal, that the alumni asked rather than gave help and were not a force to be reckoned with in carrying out his plans. He did not antagonize them, but he did nothing to enlist their active support, preferring to utilize the students in his measures to bring the University before the public. The activity shown by the alumni during Peabody's time had no parallel now. Individual alumni were influential in the legislature and on the board of trustees, but the Association was of little or no consequence, beyond the work of the committee on nomination of trustees; few attended the annual meetings, and still fewer paid the fees. In 1899 the alumni in meeting voted that the secretary might be chosen outside the alumni, all dues were abolished, and the University was asked to pay for printing the minutes of the annual meeting.

President Draper resigned in March, 1904, and the trustees, after considering a number of possibilities, including two or three members of the faculty, elected as his successor Edmund Janes James, at that time president of Northwestern University. He was the first native of the state to occupy the position, and he brought with him the understanding and sympathy of a native son who had been teacher and administrator in a normal school and in two universities of the state, coupled with training and experience gained in other states and abroad. Son of a pioneer Methodist minister, he was born on May 21, 1855 at Jacksonville, Illinois. He prepared for college in the model department of the Illinois State Normal School and after one year at Northwestern University and one at Harvard, he entered the University of Halle, in 1875, where two years later he received his doctor's degree. He did his first teaching as principal of the high school at Evanston, going from there to a similar position in the high school department of the Illinois Normal University. In 1883 he became professor of public administration in the University of Pennsylvania. While there he was for a time secretary of the graduate faculty and organized the instruction in this department. He was also director of the Wharton School of Finance and Economy. In 1890 he became professor of public administration and director of the university extension division of the University of Chicago. He was elected president of Northwestern University six years later, and in 1904 he resigned to accept the presidency of Illinois. He received the honorary degree LL.D. from Cornell College (Iowa) in 1902, from Wesleyan, 1903, Queen's College also in 1903, from Harvard University in 1909, and Michigan in 1917.

Though President James assumed the duties of his office in the summer of 1904, his formal installation was deferred until the fall of 1905, when it was utilized for making the institution known not only throughout the state, but all over the country, and abroad. Delegates were present from scores of other universities, and from the state and federal administrations, and a series of conferences of wide scope on educational subjects made the occasion distinguished and memorable.

The general lines of policy in the new administration soon showed many changes. So thoroughly had Draper done his work of reorganization to meet the needs of a large and complex institution that little change was needed in the machinery. Under Draper not only had a large administrative machine been erected; the undergraduate curriculum had been expanded and balanced; undergraduate teaching had been consistently improved; the level of student life, intellectually and socially, had been notably elevated. Taking these accomplished things for granted, the University under the leadership of President James took a long look forward and began to lay plans larger and more ambitious, some called them visionary, than had hitherto been suggested. The essentially national character of the University was emphasized and insisted upon. The efforts to set and maintain a high and ascending standard in undergraduate teaching and scholarship were continued, but distinctly greater attention was directed to broadening, strengthening, and elevating the higher levels of scholarship in the institution by building up the graduate school and the library, encouraging investigation, research, and experiment—all the intellectual activities which contribute to the world's treasury of knowledge.

Progress in the ambitious program depended on securing larger and continually larger resources, and although President Draper on retiring had felt that the limit had been reached in the size of legislative appropriations, President James approached the general assembly with requests, and reasons in support of them, which made the arrogance of his predecessor seem timidity. Some of his far-sighted enthusiasm he transferred to the legislators; with tact and skill the president and his colleagues, assisted by many alumni in and out of the legislature, bound together the interests of the University and the state, with the result that appropriations rapidly increased. President Draper had seen the income grow from about $600,000 for 1894-96 to $1,800,000 for 1902-04. The income for 1904-06 was $2,166,000, for 1906-08 it was $3,100,000; by 1914 it exceeded $6,000,000 and has so continued. The most important single event in regard to the income of the University was the enacting of a law in 1911 which levies a tax of one mill on all the assessed property of the state for the support of the University. President James had worked for this law from the beginning of his administration, pointing out the need for it as a guarantee on which the University could build for the future, and bringing to the support of the measure many of the most important influences in the state. No small share of credit for the law is due the alumni who assisted materially in presenting the cause of the University to the legislature; most of the credit, apart from that which goes to members of the University, belongs, however, to Senator Henry M. Dunlap, who fathered the bill, saw it through committees, and did much to assure its passage. Though the tax brings the University an assured income of approximately $5,000,000 every two years, it has the disadvantage of tending to limit appropriations to that amount, though already it has been found inadequate to meet the growing needs of the institution. The present legislature (1919-21) has increased the appropriation about $350,000 beyond the proceeds of the mill tax.

The most noticeable result of this amplified support was a great increase in the building program calculated to house the growing attendance and multiplying activities. A bare list of the principal structures can be mentioned here: the auditorium, the addition to the natural history building, the laboratory of physics, Lincoln Hall, the commerce, transportation, woman's, administration, genetics, and ceramics buildings, the armory, the vivarium, the immense horticultural glass houses, the addition to the chemical laboratory, more than doubling the size of the original structure, the woman's residence hall, the school of education, and the Smith memorial music building, all built since 1905.

Other material equipment has kept pace with buildings. The laboratories have been enriched in apparatus and machinery in bewildering quantities; the museums have been steadily augmented, and two new collections, those of classical art and archeology and of medieval culture, established. The most noteworthy growth has, naturally, taken place in the library. For the first twenty years after the opening of the University it had been sadly neglected, and although it grew somewhat faster after 1890, it was still deplorably weak in 1904, when there were fewer than seventy thousand volumes in it. By 1900 the number had doubled; at the end of a decade it had increased to 300,000, and when the first half-century was completed the collection numbered 420,000 volumes of books, besides thousands of pamphlets.

The encouragement of higher scholarship in many fields and by all possible means has been the outstanding characteristic of the progress of the University in the last fourteen years. The leading feature and force in this movement has been the graduate school, the influence of which has been felt in every part of the institution. At the same time, members of the faculty have been encouraged in every way possible to pursue independent investigation and research and to publish the results obtained. Promotion has largely depended on such activity, and new appointments have been made with promise in this direction in mind. More time and money has been provided for conducting experiments and investigation, departments have been equipped and encouraged to offer courses leading to advanced degrees, and several series of publications have been subsidized to make the results available.

Graduate instruction has been encouraged, but not vigorously promoted in the decade of Draper. In 1905 Dean Kinley resigned as head of the college of literature and arts to become dean of the graduate school, and an administrative faculty representing those departments giving most attention to graduate work was instituted. In 1907 legislative recognition of graduate work as a proper function of a state university was bestowed in the form of a special appropriation of $50,000 a year, repeated at the close of the biennium. With this fund fellowships and scholarships were endowed, publications were subsidized, money for special purchases in connection with research was made available, and every facility provided to encourage scholarly effort.

This growth in research has affected the instructional balance within the University; still more notably it has brought the institution into practical relations with many interests in the state outside the University, to the advantage of both parties. The work of the agricultural experiment station is of course generally known; not so widely appreciated is the extensive, various, and valuable work of the engineering experiment station for all manner of engineering interests, for which in a way it has become an experimental laboratory. Similar service is rendered by the departments of ceramics; of education, now the college of education with a special bureau of educational research; of chemistry; of political science, which has contributed much to the reorganization of state administration in Illinois; and by a group of related scientific bureaus, including the natural history survey, the state historical survey, the entomological survey, the state water survey, state geological survey, a bureau for investigating problems of Illinois mineral industries, and many others. In fact, during the last fourteen years the University has been called upon for direct service to every important industry and interest in the state; has been enabled to meet many demands by the insistence with which these interests have demanded that the state should provide the University with means to do so.

A number of administrative changes have taken place in this period. In 1905 a school of education was established in the college of literature and arts, which in 1918 was made a college of education. The colleges of literature and arts and of science, which had been pursuing somewhat parallel careers since the days of Peabody, were, after several years of debate, united in 1913 as the college of liberal arts and sciences under the deanship of Dr. Kendrie C. Babcock. The courses in business administration established in the college of literature and arts under Dean Kinley were given means for somewhat independent development through a separate appropriation of $25,000 a year made in 1905, and were enlarged into a college of commerce and business administration in 1917. Courses in ceramics were established in 1905, out of which has grown the school of ceramics with a commodious group of buildings and a considerable faculty. A department of railway engineering was established in 1906, in connection with which a locomotive testing laboratory was opened. A mine rescue station came in 1909. A growth of activity and scope equally significant has taken place in other departments without giving occasion for administrative change. Every department in the arts and sciences as in the technical colleges has grown; in the department of history, for example, special attention has been paid to western history, South America, and the Near East; courses in Sanscrit, Celtic, and Scandinavian languages have been introduced; journalism has grown to the proportions of a department, though administratively within the department of English; a similar filling out might be recounted concerning scores of branches of educational interest.

Radical changes have been made in the Chicago departments. Partly because of pressure upon the University to improve and expand the work in the college of medicine and the unwillingness of the legislature to provide means to accomplish the necessary alterations, the University was compelled to close it on June 30, 1912. The college of physicians and surgeons again opened a school on the same site. This caused such consternation among medical alumni and friends of medical education in Illinois that they proceeded to secure the capital stock of the college of physicians and surgeons and then presented it to the trustees of the university. The college of medicine was then re-opened March 6, 1913. A vigorous policy of expansion and development followed. The equipment has been perfected and brought down to date, and the entrance requirements have been raised to a par with those of the best medical schools of the United States. The dental department, which was closed at the same time as the medical department and for the same reasons, was re-opened October 1, 1913. The college of dentistry has also undergone considerable development within the last few years, as well as the school of pharmacy.

The fine spirit that has been shown throughout the various ranks of the faculty has been promoted in so small measure by a steady increase in salaries. President James has made it one of his objects, never lost sight of, to foster in the faculties a combination of intellectual restlessness and economic contentment. The latter is never attained, for competition for the best men is active and strong, and economic pressure must sometimes perform operations of extrusion not otherwise easily accomplished; but it has been his purpose to establish and maintain a scale of salaries that would keep in the University the men most valuable to it and to the state, and bring to it those men whom it most needed. Once in particular, and more than once in less emphatic terms, the legislature has been urged in recent years to make appropriations for the specific purpose of increasing salaries. And although among the leading universities of the country the state universities do not offer the most attractive salaries, among her sister state institutions Illinois has come, in the last dozen years, to occupy a favorable position in this respect.

The growth in size and complexity of the University has naturally meant a continual increase in the size of the faculty, an alteration not of size only, but a steady rise in scholarly equipment also. The numerous additions made in the period, while the teaching function has not been neglected, have been made in so far as possible with a view to bringing together a group of specialists possessing intellectual enthusiasm and scholarly productive industry. As a result an atmosphere of greater intellectual vigor has been created that has proved stimulating to the younger members of the faculty and to the graduate students. Such a growth has necessarily completely done away with the sense of social solidarity existing in the faculty in the preceding periods, when the faculty as a group was not so large, or so widely separated by intense specialization as to make homogeneity impossible. But the disappearance of the old unity has not given rise to antagonisms or cliques. There has continued to be little trace of jealousy and practically no bitterness among the groups having special interests. Friction there is now and then, of course, but surprisingly little. This genial atmosphere is due in no small measure to the spirit of intellectual and academic tolerance, equality, and freedom steadily maintained by President James. There are some more royal than the king, but they do not appreciably restrict the freedom of intellectual life and progress.

Relations between the members of the faculty and the students have shown little change except that the characteristics which came to notice in the preceding period have been somewhat intensified. With the development of the office of the dean of men the faculty has shown an increasing willingness to leave matters of personal contact to that office. Consequently the community of interest existing between the two parts of the University has not always been realized or cultivated. Not many members of the faculty maintain close personal relations with students, and not many students nowadays feel that affectionate regard for members of the faculty which was once a characteristic of the University life. This growing separatism is due not only to increase in numbers and to the activity of the offices of the deans of men and of women, but in part also to the emphasis laid on the importance of research, as compared with teaching. The desirable and far from impossible combination of the two interests in cordial co-operation remains to be developed out of a fuller and mellower adjustment to the still somewhat new aspirations of this latest period.

Student life has been revolutionized in the past fifteen years. Physical changes have brought to the immediate vicinity of the University a business district which supplies all the ordinary needs of the students. Whereas at an earlier time the need of a sandwich, a pencil, or a shoestring called the student a mile or more away, to Urbana or Champaign, all his ordinary requirements, except that of motion pictures, are now met within a block of the campus. Since the building of the first fraternity house in 1903 there has been constructed a group of sixty-six houses for such groups of students, and although perhaps a majority still live in lodgings of the type familiar from the beginning, the tendency is strong toward the better conditions that come with the organizing of groups owning their domiciles. Of this group of fraternity and sorority houses, some seventeen, representing an investment of $500,000, belong to the organizations, the title usually being in a group of alumni. This situation as introduced has fostered the growth of an element of stability in the interest of the alumni, as well as one of responsibility on the part of the students towards the University. The fraternities and sororities have had an influence in student life quite apart from their contributions to the physical well-being and social activity of their members. Among the men are forty chapters of national social fraternities, five professionals and seven locals; among the women are thirteen nationals and one local. Their influence on the scholastic endeavors of their members is helpful and they form an important element in the control of activities and customs. There is no anti-fraternity feeling in the University. Among the women there has been created a system of housing units to care for those not in organizations. And at the very close of the half-century the University built the first residence hall, to accommodate about one hundred women. The fraternity houses are all in Champaign, within a few blocks of the University, while the sororities divide their favors between the two towns, with a tendency toward the Urbana side, where the women’s residence hall is located. This movement has made a compact community of students within six blocks of the campus, with very few living farther away; and this compactness has fostered a feeling of close fellowship, of common interest, of democratic cordiality.

Five churches have been built in the neighborhood of the University to care for the students, and are centers of much helpful activity. The Presbyterians have erected a student church, and a dormitory or residence hall for women students, with an endowment of $60,000. The Methodists, who were the first to build in the University community, have purchased half a block of land adjoining the campus on which they will erect a group of buildings, including a church and a social center, and other structures requiring an expenditure of half a million dollars, provided on the Wesley Foundation. The Baptists, Unitarians, and Disciples have built churches... near the campus. The Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. organizations have erected building and collected endowments of a value exceeding a quarter of a million dollars and affording centers of religious and social work among the students, as well as furnishing living accommodations for limited numbers. The Y. W. C. A. building is a gift from Mr. W. B. McKinley, who also contributed enough of the cost of the Y. M. C. A. building to bring his donations to the two to more than $100,000.
The same friend has given more than $100,000 for a University hospital, soon to be erected. The Y. M. C. A. achieved its maximum strength and influence in the middle of the period, helped materially by the gift of a building opened in 1908. Three years later the Y. M. C. A. opened a commodious building, and the two structures have been the centers of much student activity.

A great number of organizations have represented every shade of intellectual and social interest. Of the former, a mere catalog would be too long here, but the scholarly activities of the students have made a place for Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Xi, Tau Beta Pi, which came, significantly, in the reverse of the order named, and for many others of less scope. Local honorary societies have become numerous, the most important being Mawanda, which succeeded the moribund Shield and Trident, dating from 1893, and Phoenix, founded in 1906, to give recognition, at the close of the junior year, to men who have shown high qualities of ability as students and leaders.

But the Association buildings by no means afford accommodations adequate to serve as a center of the social life of the students, and in 1909 a students' union was organized to raise a fund for a student building and take charge of undergraduate political affairs. The career of this organization demonstrates certain aspects of student activity. Inspired by a definite purpose, efforts have been made for several years to interest all students in the movement, to raise money, and to guide student life. But there has been lacking almost continuously from the beginning the disinterested and able leadership necessary to obtain the confidence and support of the students. Though there have been able leaders both in and out of the Union, the conditions have not developed those qualities of imagination combined with initiative that are the finest fruit of college life. Without question the general level of undergraduate life has been elevated; the crudeness of another time has almost wholly disappeared; the era of the rented dress suit has passed; it is hardly fair now to say, as a graduate of 1905 said, that all "social activities were characterized by a too evident desire to do the proper thing." Sophistication is now no-noticedely lacking, since the majority of students in all parts of the university come from larger centers of population. The student who in 1900 had an allowance of seventy-five dollars a month was pointed out on the campus with awe; scores now drive their own cars home to Chicago or Peoria over the week-end. Social affairs are more expensive in every way than they used to be, though they are not extravagantly elaborate. But this growth in finish, in self possession, and in consciousness has not as yet brought forth either much profound zeal for scholarship or notably fine qualities of leadership.

The measure of change within the period is easily traced in the student publications, chief of which is the Daily Illini. During Draper's time the paper had grown first into a tri-weekly and then a daily newspaper of fair quality. But its financial management, like that of most student undertakings in those days, was haphazard, to say no worse; there was no great honor to be won by working on it, and all the profits went to the editor and the manager, who obtained places through the lowest form of student politics. The case finally became so bad that the faculty did what students under adequate leadership might have done for themselves—took the choice of editor and manager out of politics and gave that, along with general supervision of the business affairs of the paper, to a board made up of four students and three members of the faculty. They proceeded to appoint editors and managers on merit and to encourage rivalry for positions on the paper both by making experience a prerequisite to promotion to the best positions and by businesslike financing which produced a surplus to be distributed among all members of the staff. In seven years after the system was introduced the paper steadily improved in quality and influence, printing forty-eight eighteen-inch columns daily and having a circulation of more than two thousand. Besides distributing more than $18,000 among the members of the staff, it accumulated a fund of nearly $15,000, most of which has been invested in a complete printing plant.

The Illio, which went on the rocks occasionally in times past, has shown steady improvement as a pictorial record of the year, though it has lost all literary character. It is under the same supervision as the Illini. The Illinois Magazine, established in 1903, has had an interrupted and unsatisfactory career. There has never been sufficiently general and sustained literary interest among the students to develop a good literary magazine. On the other hand the Illinois Agriculturist has had a prosperous success, and continues to be well edited and widely circulated. In spite of the size and strength of the engineering clientele, the Technograph has prospered no better than the Illinois Magazine, and, like it, was obliterated by the war. A symptom of growing student spirit is to be found in the Siren, a creditable humorous paper begun in 1911 and continued until the war took the students away.

Impetus was given to dramatics when in 1904 Thacher Howland Guild came to the University as instructor in English. He successfully undertook an elaborate production of Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay in connection with the installation of President James, and from that time on cultivated an interest in dramatics so wholesome and vigorous that it has not lessened since his untimely death in 1914, though it has had no special encouragement from the faculty. Debating and oratory has developed considerable strength since the days of its low estate at the beginning of the century, and in the last few years the University has held a high place in debating among the north central universities.

The quality of sportsmanship shown in athletics has been steadily good. Even in the days when chicanery was more prevalent than now in intercollegiate athletics, the wholesome influence of George Huff kept a healthful spirit predominant at Illinois. Under his coaching, Illinois has maintained a leading place in baseball, ever since the famous trip through the East in 1903. In football there have been vicissitudes. After several disastrous years, the graduate coaching system was tried during the first seven or eight years after the departure of Woodruff in 1903, with varying success, and was given up in 1912 when Coach Zuppke took charge. Since then football has been in better case. In track, also, there has been a strong growth under Coach Gill, and basketball under Jones, has been successfully encouraged. In 1914 Illinois won first place in all four of the principal sports. The attendance at games, until the war came, was large, and the spirit, manifested in an elaborate system of cheering, rather forced at times, perhaps, and in singing, which has had a healthy growth in the last decade, have been an important feature of student life. Celebrations have become less hazardous as occasion for them became more frequent, and as the Union or Council took them in hand. A special effort has been made during the past decade to obtain general participation of students in athletic activities. Tennis and golf have attracted many, though the University has done little with either intercollegiately. But more than half of the men in the University participate in the several series of baseball and football games which in fall and spring strew the south campus with many hilarious teams, and accomplish the real purpose of athletics.

This hasty sketch can give but a faint and partial suggestion of the complexity and energy of life among the students. If it is in any measure faithful to its subject it will convey the idea of a large body of generally healthy-minded young men and women, in a proportion of about four to one, living in friendly companionship in which there is little snobbishness and a vast amount of gregariousness. There is no tendency on the part of the men to resent the presence of the women; on the contrary, the women receive an amount of attention and occupy a place in affairs perhaps larger than their numbers only would entitle them to. Upon this companionship, and a democracy that ignores social distinctions as completely as is humanly possible, Illinois spirit is founded. Out of it there have as yet grown but few traditions, though there are continual self-conscious strivings towards traditions. Customs there are in numbers. The freshman is a marked youth who does not early in the fall put on the small green cap; class smokers and dances, the band concerts on the lawn, the impromptu celebration that breaks out on the first warm evening in spring and in ten minutes fills the streets with thousands of marching, singing, and dancing youth led by a huge brass band, the arrowhead of Mawanda which appears one morning each spring on the trunk of the elm by the 1903 fountain; the annual appearance of members of Sachem in their blankets; the scroll of Phi Delta Psi resting on the senior bench—these are but a few of many of the customs which give color and character to student life. The two greatest events in the college year from the undergraduate point of view are homecoming and interscholastic. The latter brings to the University thousands of high school students, who fill the fraternities and sorority and lodging houses and see the campus in a three-day frolic. In this time are crowded two plays by Mask and Bauble, a track meet, a baseball game, a circus, which has come to be a huge and elaborate show, the "stunt show" consisting of clever and enjoyable skits by groups of women students, and the May fete, which has grown out of a Maypole dance on the south campus into an elaborate show that fills the bleachers on Illinois Field.

Homecoming, designed to bring the alumni back while the University is in full operation, centers in the principal football game on the home grounds. It was instituted in 1911, largely through the energetic work of W. E. Eklaw, and has been most popular from the beginning. A smoker, dance, and other forms of entertainment are provided, but the football game and the informal, impromptu reunions of the returning alumni are the chief features of the event.

When President James came to the University he found the alumni loosely organized and not showing a lively interest in each other or in the University. Mr. W. L. Pillsbury, who became secretary of the agricultural experiment station in 1888, had been made registrar in 1893. He had known all the entering students from that time on, and as a part of his work had kept up a directory of alumni. In 1899 he was made secretary of the alumni association. To him, loved by all who knew him, the alumni willingly left the work they might have done, and lost consciousness. There were a few alumni clubs, and the committee on nomination of trustees continued to function, but the annual meetings were slim affairs, and little happened between them. President James had no sooner gathered the reins till he began to stir up interest among the alumni by setting Frank W. Scott, '01, at the task of compiling a biographical record of the graduates. The careful work and remarkable memory of Mr. Pillsbury made this a comparatively easy task, and the volume was issued in 1906. The book aroused as many graduates to wish further news of their classmates and others that a few alumni undertook on their own responsibility to start a periodical, though more than one graduate expressed the belief that there was not sufficient material obtainable to support a quarterly magazine and that the dues necessary to support it would take away the charm of sentiment then felt by the alumni towards the University. The Alumni Quarterly was begun in January, 1907, and has continued since that time, being made the official organ of the association in June, and supplemented after 1913 by the Fortnightly Notes. Largely through the influence of the Record and the Quarterly alumni interest revived; the fourteen clubs in 1907 had increased by 1911 to thirty, and that number has steadily increased to fifty in 1918. In 1912 a new constitution was adopted by the alumni association to coordinate the clubs and increase the activities of the association. The Illini Club of Chicago opened club rooms in 1911, and cooperated with the association and the university in a number of undertakings. President James began soon after coming to the University, and has continued, to write to the alumni whenever matters of general concern demanded their attention. He has secured their assistance in dealing with the legislature and in other matters connected with the University, either directly or through the association. In not a few important crises in legislative affairs the University has been assisted by prompt action of the organized, informed, and prepared alumni. Their activity has not as yet brought much to the University in the way of gifts, except that of the medical alumni in presenting the stock of the college of medicine to the institution. Several attempts to raise a fund for a building in honor of Dr. Gregory have been made, and the last one had secured subscriptions for some $70,000 when the war made further progress for the time being impossible.

As the close of the first half-century of the University approached, plans were made to celebrate the occasion in fitting manner by the issuing of a series of publications and by exercises at the University so timed as to form a part of the celebration of the centennial of the state, as well as to signalize the close of a period of remarkable achievement by the state University. There were to be several publications dealing with the University itself, including a history in one volume, written by Allan Nevin, '12; a more extensive historical account of the University in several volumes, by B. E. Powell, appointed University historian, and a new edition of the Alumni Record, to present some measure of the principal product of the half century then closing. These three works are now issued, except that the extended history has not progressed beyond the first volume.

Under the direction of the State Centennial Commission, a group of men in the University were appointed to prepare a series of volumes on the history of the state, and three of these have now been issued. Plans were made to hold at the University a series of meetings to which scholars and leaders in many fields were to be invited to engage in discussions, out of which it was expected would come that a collection of papers which could be embodied in a series of University Semi-Centennial Publications. An important place in the plans was assigned to a historical pageant which was to depict the rise and development of the institution, and a pageant master was engaged to prepare that and a series of minor pageants throughout the year.

When the United States was drawn into the war, the plans for a celebration at the University were abandoned. There was given, however, a series of pageants which instead of portraying the triumph of half a century of peaceful but energetic growth in and towards the finer things of civilization, made appeals for pity and food, and later depicted the nation seizing arms and going forth to meet her foe.

Until the United States joined in the war, there had appeared little indication that the students or the faculty were vitally concerned with the conflict. With all the people of the great peace-loving heart of the continent, she seemed to share that serenity of mood which won the scorn of the more belligerent spokesmen of the seaborne states. A few students left from time to time to join the Canadian or other foreign forces, but the current of University life, even of its talk, was not much affected.

All this was changed when the call came to America. From that time until the riotous celebration on the steps of the Auditorium at two o'clock in the morning when news came that the armistice had been signed, the one purpose and interest of the University and all her men and women was to seek out all the ways in which she and they could contribute to the work America had to do, and then to follow those ways to the end. All the resources of the institution were at once placed by President James at the disposal of the government. The students left in great numbers, some with an ambulance unit promptly formed at the University and some in a battery recruited at the University, others as volunteers in many branches of the service, many to munition and other factories or to farms in this country or in Canada. From the middle of April until the close of the year about 1300 students withdrew for service of one kind or another. Few classes were quite abandoned, but all were much reduced in size, the laboratories were sparsely occupied, and social activities were curtailed or abandoned. Not many members of the faculty withdrew that year, for those of military age were generally advised to wait until it became apparent where their services were most needed. The University made liberal arrangements for graduating the seniors who left early and for granting credit to others; while all possible assurances were given departing members of the faculty that they might find a welcome on their return. Special classes in military, drilling daily, were organized, and more than five hundred students enrolled; courses in preparation for ordnance and quartermasters duties were filled; more than one hundred women joined classes in training for hospital service. On May 21 instruction was begun in the government school of military aeronautics, established at the University under government direction for giving ground training in preparation for flying. The University took over the Y. M. C. A. building, which it converted into a barrack, and turned over to the school the old armory, to which it built an addition, for laboratory uses, and a number of rooms in other buildings. Registration in this work increased to about eight hundred, and the newly completed women's residence hall was given up to the aviators for use as barracks. When the year closed, nearly two hundred and fifty seniors absent in the service of the government received their diplomas by mail, and more men from Illinois than from any other University had applied for admission to the officers' training camp at Ft. Sheridan and been accepted.

The exodus of students and the feeling of uncertainty as to the effect of the draft led to rumors that the University would not open in the fall, but there was never any intention of closing the institution, and all departments opened as usual, though some of them were considerably disorganized by the absence of many of the younger instructors and some of the older men. Registration fell off a fifth, the loss being among the men, the number of women in attendance remaining normal. Only the college of medicine showed an increase over the attendance of the preceding year. The many war activities which crowded the fall months led to the appointment in December, under the chairmanship of Dr. Kinley, of a general war service committee, with branches to attend to the publication of leaflets, to publicity, lectures at the University and over the state, the collection of funds, the compiling of war service records, and employment. Many meetings were held in the course of the year, the most notable being a conference held at the end of January under the direction of Dean Davenport to help solve the problem of food. It was attended by Governor Lowden and many leaders of industry in the state and covered a wide field. President Wilson sent an important address. The raising of the University service flag on February 14 was made an occasion for a number of stirring addresses. The flag at that time contained 2,880 stars.

No mere sketch can even suggest the many ways in which the University contributed resources in serving the country. Many members of the faculty were called to Washington, more than forty all told, for periods of weeks or months, to render expert service in science or engineering, in historical research, in the study of economic and other problems. At the University scores of men and a number of laboratories were given over to confidential investigations and experiments of vital value to the government. In physics and in chemistry especially, work was carried on that was invaluable, and in the chemical laboratory was produced the total supply of some rare substances on which not only our own country but all her associates as well relied.

Almost three-quarters of a million dollars were subscribed by members of the University to the various relief funds and government loans. To the first liberty loan the University community subscribed $50,000; to the second, $220,000; and to the fourth, $3,140,000. The first war fund drive brought $31,000 and the united drive more than $46,000. War savings stamps amounting to more than $25,000 were sold. Relief appeals met generous response—to the Belgian, $12,000; Syrian-Armenian, $8,744; for the Red Cross, $129,555; for the University ambulance unit, $4,800; for the University Union in Europe, $1,365.

But of course the principal contribution was made by the students and alumni who gave up their work to serve wherever they were needed in the war. A summary of the total numbers thus engaged is given elsewhere in this volume, a total equalled by no other American University of like age and numbers. No fewer than 5307 names appear on the University roll of honor; and the roll of the dead has reached a total of one hundred and fifty-seven.

By this grave national crisis the first half century of the University was brought to an unexpected close. In the midst of the regret that such things must come, there is to be found satisfaction in the evidence thus presented that the colleges and universities of the country are sending forth a breed of men ready and abundantly able to meet the world's greatest crises, and that among them all none showed more readiness or worth than Illinois.

Events at the University during the year in which this book has been in preparation do not belong in an account of the first fifty years, but fall into the second half-century in point of time. Really, however, the year which began in September, 1918, belongs neither to the closing era nor to the one that has just begun, but constitutes rather an intermission which emphasizes the separation of the one from the other. In addition to all the activities in support of the war hitherto enumerated, on October there was instituted the Students' Army Training Corps, which enrolled, including the military, naval, and medical sections, a total of 3,411 students. For two months all other University concerns were subordinated to the task of providing lodgment and instruction for this mass of young men training for war service.

The University became virtually a military school. Although more than two-thirds of the usual courses were continued, emphasis was laid on the several special courses required by the government, which was to all purposes, in charge of the curriculum. All members of the corps were under military discipline, living in barracks, wearing uniforms, and having their daily programs regulated by officers. Such conditions made the usual college life impossible, and from the beginning of October until late in December few of the characteristic features of campus life were discernible. The armory was made into an immense barrack by constructing a second floor, affording room for more than fifteen hundred men, with a mess hall below for all members of the corps.

All fraternity houses and many lodging houses were converted into barracks, and such men as were not in the corps lived where they could find room. The labor of preparing barracks and mess facilities for this number of men in a community already normally full and possessing no dormitories was tremendous, but it was performed with rapidity. To add to the difficulties of the situation, an epidemic of influenza made it necessary to provide hospital accommodations for more than three hundred patients at a time, when all was in confusion of change and reorganization, and when to find a nurse was a hard task. But this task also was accomplished, with a degree of success indicated by a gratifyingly low death rate.
The corps was demobilized on December 21. The net result of what might have proved not only an interesting but an important educational experiment was very unsatisfactory, for three reasons; the period of experiment was too short, too much time had to be given to the preparing of quarters, and the influenza added to the confusion already too great. Few who had a part in the episode get much satisfaction out of the recollection of it. And yet the experience of living in the mass, on terms of complete equality in discomfort with men of all sorts and conditions was not without its compensations. A writer in the Illio says: "We slept in the biggest bedroom in the state. Simultaneously 1,500 of us turned in every night at ten. Simultaneously 3,000 feet hit the floor every morning at five. We bunked together and liked it. We learned democracy from a practical standpoint."

So far as progress in ordinary college courses was concerned the year amounted to little before the opening of the second quarter in January. From that time on, with a reduced registration, the University gradually resumed its normal condition. The crisis left little permanent effect on curriculum, outlook, or atmosphere. The one course in war issues required of all members of the army training corps was continued as an elective and enrolled about seventy-five students. The only lasting effect to be found in the curriculum is a new course in citizenship to be required of all students beginning in the fall of 1919. The expectation somewhat generally expressed that the spirit of student life would be sobered and made more responsible or otherwise altered seems not likely to be realized. No sooner had the military restraints been removed than the students made efforts, in the main successful, to restore with as little loss of time as possible all the customary features of college life. By the close of the year few traces were left of what at the beginning had seemed likely to bring a radical revision of both the curriculum and the life in the University.
ANNALS OF THE UNIVERSITY

An act donating public lands, on the ratio of 30,000 acres for each senator and representative, to the states and territories which would provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts was passed by congress, and approved by President Lincoln on July 2, 1862. Under this grant Illinois would receive 480,000 acres to the value of $600,000.00, the interest on which was to be applied for these purposes. The grant had to be accepted and applied to its uses before July, 1867, or revert to the government.

The legislature of Illinois accepted the grant Feb. 14, 1863, and discussed the matter for some time without being able to come to any agreement on details of the proposed college or on its location. Some wished to divide the money up among the existing colleges, provided they established schools of this nature; some to establish a school to teach agriculture and the mechanic arts; and some to attach a new school to the Normal University.

At the state fair held in Decatur in 1864, a committee was appointed by the state agricultural society to present some definite plan to the legislature. This committee was composed of Wm. H. Van Epps, Prof. J. B. Turner, A. B. McConnell, B. G. Roots, and John P. Reynolds. They drew up a bill as an expression of the views of the farmers, and presented it to the legislature in 1865, and again in 1867.

A meeting of all those interested in the organization of the proposed Industrial University was held at Bloomington, and recommended that the state build only one university.

Sept. 21—Notice was published of an informal election to be held in Champaign county on Oct. 10, by order of the board of supervisors, to decide whether or not the county should appropriate $100,000.00 worth of Champaign county bonds "to secure the location of the Illinois Industrial University in this county."

Oct. 5—Proposal of Champaign and Urbana was to purchase the building then standing, called "The Urbana and Champaign Institute Building," with the eight acres on which it stood, at a cost of $30,000.00, then use the other $70,000.00 to buy more land and secure the location of the University over the other contestants—Bloomington, Jacksonville, and other towns had made offers. The Champaign papers said that the county could thus give this building, 1,000 acres for a farm, 100 acres for a "garden-patch" and still have $40,000.00 left.

The building was erected in 1861, supposedly at a cost of $175,000.00, and was said to be "one of the largest and most substantial buildings in the state, second only to the Normal University." It stood at the north end of what is now Illinois Field, facing University avenue. The main part of the structure was one hundred twenty-five feet front, forty feet in depth, and five stories high. From the center projected a wing forty-four by seventy feet, four stories high. It contained ninety dormitory rooms, each ten by fifteen, "suitable room for principals, professors, etc." and "accommodations for 800 students."

Oct. 12—Returns of the election on the question of the bond issue show the vote to have been: For, 1,601; against, 1,635—majority for, 56. "Urbana and Champaign were unanimously in favor of the measure. A considerable opposition was manifested in some of the country towns, however." This opposition was due to the fact that the smaller towns regarded the whole thing as a scheme on the part of Urbana and Champaign to make the entire county pay for a school which would benefit these two communities only.

Jan. 10—Mr. Ticher (senator from the seventh district) introduced into the senate a bill for “an act to provide for the organization, endowment, and maintenance of the Illinois Industrial University.” This bill provided, among other things, that the institution should be located at Champaign. At the same date Senator Fuller (twenty-third district) introduced a bill similar to Mr. Ticher’s except that it provided for the location of the University by a commission to be appointed by the governor. These two bills were read twice and ordered printed. Jan. 11—Both bills were introduced in the house, the Champaign bill being offered by Mr. Griggs from that district. The senate at this time voted that the entire grant should be applied to one institution. Jan. 25—The governor approved a bill giving any county, city, township, or incorporated town authority to levy taxes or voluntary subscriptions for the purpose of securing the location of the University.

Feb. 1—The Fuller bill was amended by striking out the section providing for a committee to locate the college. Feb. 22—House bill amended by adding to the offer of the institute property, 810 acres of land, $50,000.00 worth of freight (appropriated by the Illinois Central), $100,000.00 in Champaign county bonds, and $2,000.00 in fruit, shade, and ornamental trees and shrubbery from Dunlap’s nursery, making a total of $450,000.00 estimated valuation of property. This bill as amended passed the house on the same day. It provided that the institution should be located in Urbana. The trustees were to be appointed by the governor, with approval of the senate, five from each grand judicial division, and one from each congressional district. They were to serve for six years, without salary, the first appointment to draw lots, one-third to serve two, one-third four, and one-third six years. The trustees were to elect a regent to serve two years, a treasurer, and a recording secretary, and were to provide buildings, teachers, etc. Students were to be at least fifteen years old. Each county was entitled to a scholarship for descendants of soldiers and seamen. No degrees were to be conferred on graduates. The regent, with the governor, the superintendent of public instruction, and the president of the state agricultural society were to be ex officio members of the board. The instructors were “to teach in the most thorough manner such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts and military tactics, without excluding other scientific and classical studies.” The college year was to extend through six autumn and winter months so that the students could go home for the six spring and summer months or stay at the University and pursue optional studies “provided that no student shall at any time be allowed to remain in or about the University in idleness, or without full mental or industrial occupation.” This act passed the house by a vote of sixty-six to ten, the senate by eighteen to seven, and was approved Feb. 28, 1867. The immediate result was a huge celebration in Champaign.

Mar. 8—A supplemental bill was passed providing that if county authorities failed to comply with the requirements of the act of June 1, the trustees were to locate the University at some other town. Trustees from congressional districts were appointed by Governor Oglesby as follows:

First, David S. Hammond, Cook,
Second, Luther W. Lawrence, Boone,
Third, Horatio C. Burchard, Stephenson,
Fourth, John S. Johnson, Hancock,
Fifth, Samuel Edwards, Bureau,
Sixth, O. B. Galusha, Grundy,
Seventh, M. L. Dunlap, Champaign,
Eighth, Samuel Allen, Tazewell,
Ninth, Alexander Blackburn, McDonough,
Tenth, M. C. Goltra, Morgan,
Eleventh, J. P. Hungate, Clay,
Twelfth, Willard C. Flagg, Madison,
Thirteenth, A. M. Brown, Pulaski.

From the grand judicial divisions: First—L. R. McMurry, Effingham; Charles Topping, Union; Thos. Quick, Washington; and Isaac S. Mahan, Marion. Second—George Harding, Edgar; Henry Pickerel, Macon; Mason Brayman, Sangamon. Third—John M. Van Osdel, Cook; J. C. Burrough, Cook; S. S. Hayt, Cook; Emery Cobb, Kankakee; and Robert Douglass, Lake.

Mar. 12—First meeting of the board of trustees was held in Springfield. The names of Hon. Daniel J. Pickney of Ogle County, Dr. N. N. Wood of Morgan County, Hon. J. L. Pickard of Cook County, and Dr. John Milton Gregory of Kalamazoo, Mich., were proposed as regent. Dr. Gregory was elected at a salary of $3,000.00 a year. A committee of five, with the regent as chairman, was selected to prepare a course of study and to report to the board. John W. Bunn of Springfield was elected treasurer, and a finance committee to serve for one year was appointed. Willard C. Flagg of Madison County was elected corresponding secretary; O. B. Galusha of Grundy county, recording secretary. The board passed a resolution favoring the establishment of a mechanical department to be located at Chicago. Mar. 29—An election was held in Urbana and Champaign to decide whether the two cities should appropriate $45,000.00 for the University, Champaign to give $25,000.00, Urbana, $20,000.00. The vote was as follows: Champaign:—For, 676; against, 4. Urbana:—For, 406; against, o. Mar. 29—Dr. Gregory visited Champaign and Urbana for the first time.

Apr. 10—Vote authorizing supervisors to issue the bonds for $100,000.00 resulted as follows: For, 2,731; against, 867.

May 7—The second meeting of the board of trustees was held in the chapel of the "Urbana and Champaign Institute," twenty-two of the thirty-two trustees being present. Dr. Gregory accepted the regency, the salary having been increased to $4,000.00 a year. A committee on buildings and grounds was appointed, the land grants accepted, and the University permanently located at Urbana, Scrip was ordered sold. A seal was adopted. It was decided to open the institution on the first day of March, 1868. A resolution to admit both sexes was referred to the executive committee to be appointed by the regent.

A committee on courses of instruction reported the following curriculum:

I Agricultural department
   (1) Agriculture
   (2) Horticulture
   (3) Landscape gardening

II Polytechnical department
   (1) Mechanical science and art
   (2) Civil engineering
   (3) Mining and metallurgy
   (4) Architecture and fine arts

III Military department
   (1) Engineering
   (2) Tactics

IV Chemistry and natural science
V Trade and commerce
VI General science and literature
   (1) Mathematics
   (2) Natural history, chemistry, etc.
   (3) English language and literature
   (4) Modern languages and literature
   (5) Ancient languages and literature
   (6) History and social science
   (7) Philosophy (intellectual and moral)

July 31—Dr. Gregory issued a circular, proposing that each county agricultural society offer a prize of one hundred dollars to aid the best scholar from the public schools of the county who should attend the Industrial University.

Nov. 26—The board of trustees purchased six and one-half lots adjacent to the University for $1,850.00. The lots purchased lay along the west of what is now Illinois Field. The committee recommended the purchase of twenty-four others, between Romine and Mathews avenues, east of Illinois Field, for $9,150.00. The board decided that all students should register in the military department. The year was divided into three terms, running from September to June. Three men were elected to the faculty, a head farmer, Jonathan Periam, Professor William Baker of Springfield, Ill., and Professor G. W. Atherton of New York. March 11 was decided upon as the date for the formal opening of the University.

Mar. 10—Willard F. Bliss was elected professor of agriculture. Mar. 11—Inaugural ceremonies and formal opening of the University. Hon. S. W. Moulton presided at the exercises. The music was under the direction of Geo. F. Root of Chicago. The dedication hymn was written by Dr. Gregory. Letters from Governor Oglesby, Senator Yates, and General Logan were read. The principal address was delivered by the Hon. Newton Bateman, state superintendent of public instruction. Gen. Hurlburt introduced Dr. Gregory. The exercises were followed by a banquet in the dining hall of the University. Mar.—Philomathean and Adelphic literary societies were organized. Tuition at the University was placed at $5.00 a term, $15.00 a year.

June.—The University closed for the year; seventy-seven students were enrolled during the first term. At the closing exercises Professor J. A. Sewall of Normal delivered an address before the literary societies.

Aug. 5.—The following appointments were announced: Prof. A. P. S. Stewart of Harvard, chemistry, Captain S. W. Shattuck of Norwich University, assistant professor of mathematics and instructor in military tactics, and T. J. Burrill of the Urbana schools, as assistant professor of natural history. The latter had been engaged by the regent in April. Aug. 12—The first catalog of the University was issued.

Sept. 14.—The University opened with a total enrollment of eighty students.

Nov.—The committee on faculty of the board of trustees reported the appointment of Captain Edward Snyder as accountant and teacher of bookkeeping and German. The board took up for consideration a resolution of the city council of Chicago, promising a donation of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the establishment in Chicago of a polytechnical school. The members of the board residing in the third grand division and the first congressional district were authorized to accept the offer on behalf of the board. The following resolution was passed: "Resolved, that we recognize it as a duty of the board of trustees to make this University pre-eminently a practical school of agriculture and the mechanic arts, not excluding other scientific and classical studies." A resolution calling for the admission of women to the University was referred to the next meeting for action.

Dec. 19.—The "First annual course of agricultural lectures and discussions" was announced. The course was to start on the twelfth of January and to continue for eight days. "Recommended courses of study," for the use of entering students were published.

Mar., 1869.—The annual report of the regent included a statement that the students had worked on the farm two hours a day in the spring, and one hour a day during the fall. The labor system was continued. Dr. Gregory was re-elected regent. The board adopted a resolution directed to the governor recommending that the number of members of the board should be cut down; that there should henceforth be one member from each congressional district. It was resolved to admit female students "as soon as means are at our command to furnish proper buildings for the purpose."

July.—Prof. Wm. M. Baker was elected regent pro tem during the absence of the regent in Europe. One thousand dollars was appropriated for a greenhouse. S. W. Robinson was appointed as professor of mechanical engineering.

1869-70

Feb., 1870.—The department of mechanical engineering was created.

Mar.—The trustees voted to admit women "as soon as buildings are provided."

Aug. 25.—It was finally decided, by a vote of five to four, to admit women to the University. A. P. Bliss, professor of agriculture and recording secretary, resigned, and Professor Snyder was elected recording secretary.

Sept. 3, 1870.—A system of student government was adopted. The legislative body consisted of a general assembly elected by vote of the students; the judicial department was a council of five, chosen from the general assembly; and the executive department consisted of a president and vice-president of the government, an adjutant for each building, and hall sergeants.

Feb. 24, 1871.—The first building appropriation for the University was introduced into the legislature. It provided for $100,000 a year for two years for a main building and $12,500 a year for two years for a mechanical engineering building, besides $25,000 a year for running expenses, apparatus, etc. This bill as passed by the legislature, March 13, 1871, provided $75,000 for a building to cost not more than $150,000; $75,000 more was to be appropriated at an adjourned session. The second appropriation was not made, and the building was completed at the expense of University funds.

Feb. 28.—A scientific association was organized.
Mar.—The regent reported twenty-two women in attendance. Dr. Gregory was re-elected. A site for the new main hall was adopted, and Mr. Van Osdol of Chicago was chosen to be the architect. The library numbered 5,000 volumes. Donations for the year included 200 gooseberry cuttings.

June 4-7—Closing exercises. Baccalaureate address by Regent Gregory; address before the Industrial Society by Ex-Gov. Oglesby; address before the Literary Societies by J. Mahoney, of Chicago.

Aug.—The executive committee of the board of trustees voted to allow the regent to use one recitation room for a preparatory department. Contracts for two new buildings were let, and the site of the mechanical engineering hall (old woodshop) was adopted. Don Carlos Taft was appointed professor of geology and zoology. He had begun teaching in April. Aug. 24—A convention of "friends of agriculture and polytechnic education," held in Chicago, appointed a committee of one from each state in which was located a college founded on the national land grant, to petition congress to establish agricultural experiment stations at these colleges. Dr. Gregory was president of the convention and appointed secretary Flagg as committeeman from Illinois. A circular to Illinois congressmen was accordingly issued in November.

Sept. 13, 1871—Drill hall and mechanical shops opened. On the same day the cornerstone of University hall was laid. Hon. Newton Bateman delivered the principal address, October 4, 1871. Organization of the Alethenai literary society by women of the University.

Oct.—The Chicago fire occurred during this month. One hundred and fifty-seven students were sent from the military to assist in keeping order in the city during and after the fire.

Nov.—The Student, first publication by the students of the University appeared. It was published monthly.

Mar., 1872—The trustees requested the legislature to appropriate money to finish University hall. A boarding hall for women was established by the University.

April—Because the legislature adjourned without appropriating money to finish University hall, the executive committee of the board of trustees voted to sell Champaign county bonds, held by the board, to secure the necessary funds.

June 6—First presentation of "certificates" to graduates. Those receiving them were: John J. Davis of Freeport, Willis A. Reiss of Belleville, Alonzo L. Whitcomb of Urbana, Stephen A. Reynolds of Belvidere, James N. Mathews of Mason, Charles W. Rolfe of Montgomery. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Mathews, and Dr. Edwards, president of Normal University. The university band furnished music for the first time.

Feb.—Organization of the Young Men's Christian Association at the University.

Mar.—Dr. Gregory was re-elected regent, relieved from teaching, and given a leave of absence until fall to enable him to take a European trip. Professor Shattuck was appointed regent pro tem. N. C. Ricker was appointed instructor in architecture.

May 7—A law was enacted providing that the board of trustees should henceforth consist of nine members, three from each grand judicial division of the state, appointed by the governor.

June 2-5—Commencement. Address delivered by Hon. Andrew D. White, president of Cornell university. June 4—The legislature voted an appropriation to finish University hall. June 5—The alumni association of the University was organized with fifteen charter members. A constitution was adopted; S. A. Reynolds, '72, was elected president; C. I. Hays, '73, secretary; F. L. Hatch, '73, vice-president; and M. B. Burwash, '72, treasurer.

July—The newly organized board of trustees of nine members met. It passed a resolution declaring that agriculture and the mechanics arts were the primary studies of the institution, all others being secondary.

Sept.—Name of the University student paper was changed from The Student to The Illini. Departments of the University now recognized were: (1) agriculture; (2) polytechnic; (3) military; (4) chemistry and natural science; (5) trade and commerce; (6) general science and literature.

Mar. 7, 1874—Dedication of Philomathean hall. Address by Dr. Gregory. Mar. 11—Celebration of anniversary day. Address by Professor T. J. Burrill. Failure of the legislature to pass any bill of appropriations for the University called for the discussion by the trustees of methods of retrenchment.

June 9—N. C. Ricker appointed assistant professor of architecture. June 10—Commencement meeting of alumni association. A new constitution was adopted. N. C. Ricker, '72, was elected president A. C. Swartz, '73, secretary; C. W. Rolfé, '72, treasurer.

Sept. 21—First issue of the University Reporter, a publication of four small pages, ostensibly to arouse interest in the student government and to advocate the establishment of a university press. Its real object was to elect a certain ticket in the student campaign. There were three tickets in the field: "Reform," "law and order," and "reporter." Almost every one of the thirty candidates on the "reporter" ticket was elected.

Nov. 26—First annual banquet of the telegraphic association, composed of students of the new art telegraphy.

Dec. 4—Union meeting of Philomathean, Adelphic, Scientific, and Alethenai societies.

Mar. 4, 1875—Banquet of senior military class. Professor Manley Miles of Michigan, was elected professor of agriculture and instructor in agricultural chemistry, at a salary of $5,000 a year.

June—N. C. Ricker was promoted to full professorship. June 7-8-9—Commencement. First annual exercises of alumni association on June 8. N. Clifford Ricker, '72, president, A. C. Swartz, '73, secretary, C. W. Rolfé, '72, treasurer. The alumni oration, by S. A. Reynolds, was read by F. L. Hatch.

1875-6

Oct. 28, 1875—Second annual oratorical contest between the colleges of Illinois was held at Jacksonville. The contestants were representatives of Knox, Northwestern, Illinois Wesleyan, Chicago University, Shurtleff, Monmouth, Illinois College, and Illinois Industrial University. First prize was won by J. C. Lewis of the Industrial University.

Mar., 1876—Trustees decided to establish a preparatory department. March 11—Anniversary day. Address by Dr. Gregory.

June—Dr. Gregory presented his resignation as regent, but his resignation was not accepted. June 6—It was discovered that a chapter of a fraternity had secretly existed for some time in the University. The regent offered, and the trustees adopted this resolution: "Resolved, That the board condemns the formation and perpetuation of secret societies in the University as detrimental to the scheme of self-government attempted by the students; and that we trust a due regard to the best interests of the institution will induce our students to disband and discontinue such organizations." The Young Men's Christian Association was granted the use of a room in University hall. All University instructors were given notice of a prospective cut of ten per cent in salaries, caused by lack of funds. Second annual exercises of the alumni association. N. C. Ricker, president, I. O. Baker, '74, secretary, F. L. Hatch, '73, treasurer. A new constitution was adopted.

Sept.—Dr. Gregory withdrew his resignation. Mar., 1877—School of art and design established. Dr. Gregory re-elected regent. Professor Ricker's plans for a chemistry building were accepted. A reduction of ten per cent of all salaries was decreed by the trustees.

June 6—The alumni voted to have no banquet and no social gathering at its next meeting.

Sept.—Preparatory students were required to drill. Chemical laboratory located. All bids for the building were rejected. Major Dinwiddie, the first army commandant, took charge of the military department.

Oct. 18—Intercollegiate contest at Monmouth, won by Knox, Illinois Industrial University, third.

Feb. 13, 1878—Organization of temperance union by students.
Mar.—Illini advocated intercollegiate baseball contests. Seniors decide to leave a clock for west tower of Main hall as class memorial. Rules passed by the board governing the granting of degrees. * In addition there were on June 1, 1918, in the library at Urbana, 48,506 pamphlets, 2,042 maps, and 4,816 pieces of sheet music; the library of the State Laboratory of Natural History contained 9,085 volumes, 1,200 pamphlets, and 8 maps; that of the State Geological Survey, 2,250 books, 4,875 pamphlets, and 975 maps. In Chicago the College of Medicine had 19,526 volumes and 3,200 pamphlets; the School of Pharmacy, 3,350 books and 1,200 pamphlets. The grand total on June 1, 1919 was 422,763 books, 60,071 pamphlets, and 3025 maps.

* Estimated.
NOTE

An attempt has been made to record concerning each graduate (1) full name, (2) degree or degrees, (3) present occupation, (4) date and place of birth, (5) names of parents and date and place of birth of each, (6) preparation for University, (7) membership in societies and fraternities, (8) university honors, (9) services and achievements, (10) membership and office in important organizations, (11) date and place of marriage, with name of husband or wife, (12) names of children and dates of births and deaths, and (13) present address.

Unless otherwise noted, all degrees were received at Illinois.

Under (7) much material that may seem trivial has been included because of the interest attaching to details of undergraduate life. Two addresses have in most cases been given, the home address being more or less permanent, the business address, being, especially for teachers, subject to frequent change.

An asterisk (*) indicates that the person before whose name it stands is dead. A dagger (†) indicates that the person after whose biographical sketch it appears has not responded to letters and that the sketch has been prepared from such information as could be obtained elsewhere. Since mail addressed to these persons has not been returned the addresses are presumably correct. A double dagger (‡) indicates that the address is the latest known, but incorrect. Biographies and addresses were revised in accordance with information received on or before May 9, 1919 for the class of 1872, and until May 20, 1919, for the class of 1918.

In many cases the subjects of sketches have kindly submitted detailed lists of writings so long that they could not be included. These, together with all other material used in compiling this and earlier editions of the Alumni Record, are preserved in the office of the Alumni Association. Additional material, corrections, photographs—anything of biographical significance—sent to that office will be filed and preserved.

The Editor is indebted to all who have helped in the compiling of the book, especially to Thomas Arkle Clark, '90, for information about alumni in the war, and to Carl Stephens, '12, for daily assistance from the beginning to the end of the task, and for compiling the war service index and the accompanying statistics.
