This is my paper, "Storytelling is Scaffolding: The Advantages and Implementations of Bilingual Storytelling for Youth," which I wrote for IS506 Youth Services Librarianship. I'm a kinesthetic learner, which means I learn by doing something physically (rather than a visual or auditory learner). It means I do some crazy stuff like writing 15'9" papers (that's right, I measured) because I can't comprehend it when it's on a screen. I won't lie, it's a long process, but it allows for reflection on my topic while I work. I would do well at Hogwarts, where professors assign a specific length instead of a word or page count!
